Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy in relation to his Department's non-departmental public bodies (a) consulting with hon. Members on developments in their constituencies and (b) inviting hon. Members to events within their constituencies; what advice or guidance he (i) has given and (ii) proposes to issue on these matters; and if he will make a statement. [3034]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have given no specific advice to non-departmental public bodies on these issues. I would, however, expect them to observe the normal courtesies in relation to matters in hon. Members' constituencies.

Crofting Trusts Advisory Service

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the number of specific inquiries made to the crofting trusts advisory service since its inception; and if he will make a statement. [3173]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The crofting trusts advisory service has had nine inquiries from crofting communities plus four from individual crofters and 26 from other parties.

There have also been eight meetings with individual crofting communities, an open meeting in Skye and another in the Uists. In addition, CTAS has assisted one community to meet the cost of a study into the viability of community ownership and helped another with the legal costs of establishing a crofting trust.

Forestry Commission (Woodland Sales)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list all Forestry Commission woodlands currently for sale, and indicate for each

(a) into which English or Welsh county or Scottish region it falls, (b) the number of hectares covered and (c) if an access agreement has been made with the local authority guaranteeing continuing public access; [475]

(2) how many Forestry Commission woodlands have been sold since October 1991; how many of these were sold without public access protected; how many hectares of Forestry Commission woodland have been sold from October 1991 to the latest available date; and how many hectares have been sold with public access protected; [476]

(3) how many Forestry Commission woodlands have been sold in each month of 1996 to date, indicating for each month (a) the number sold with access to the public protected and (b) the number sold with access to the public not protected; [477]

(4) if he will list all the Forestry Commission woodlands for which the level of existing access has been assessed under the guidelines on continued public access to Forestry Commission woodlands after sale, giving for each (a) the English or Welsh county or Scottish region into which it falls, (b) the number of hectares covered by the woodland (c) the Forestry Commission's formal judgement regarding the importance of access at that woodland, (d) what consultations were carried out by Forestry Commission staff in making their judgment, (e) whether the woodland has been sold, or is currently for sale, or has been withdrawn from sale and (f) whether a public access agreement is currently in force. [478]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 28 October 1996]: The subjects of the questions relate to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. Gordon Cowie, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Gordon M. Cowie to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 12 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your four Questions about the sale of Forestry Commission woodlands.

1. At Annex A, I enclose a list of all Forestry Commission Woodlands currently for sale, either on the Open Market or by Negotiation.

2. The Forestry Commission sold 766 Woodlands covering 39,938 hectares in the period 1 October 1991 to 31 December 1995. Of them 48, 2,421 hectares, have Public Access protected either through a public access agreement or under the sponsorship arrangements.

3. I enclose at Annex B, details of the number of Forestry Commission woodlands sold in each month this year.

4. I regret that I am unable to answer your final question asking for details of the assessment of the level of public use in each individual case. We have assessed well over 1,500 woodlands since these procedures were introduced, and the details of the assessments are only stored on the individual files which are held in local offices throughout Britain; we have not summarised the assessments in any way. I am sure that you will appreciate, therefore, that it would be a very expensive and time-consuming task to provide the information needed to answer your question.

BSE

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total expenditure to date on the BSE eradication and compensation schemes; and if he will make a statement. [2163]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 6 November 1996]: The total expenditure to date is £700 million. Most of this expenditure has been on the over-30-month slaughter scheme, the calf processing scheme, the additional EU compensation package—beef special premium scheme and suckler cow premium scheme top-up, beef marketing payment scheme—the beef stocks transfer scheme, the animal feed recall scheme, aid to renderers, emergency aid to the slaughtering sector.

HEALTH

Dementia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the basic training nurses receive in respect of Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia; [3272]

(2) what steps he has taken to improve the training of health and social care professionals in respect of people with Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia. [3271]

Mr. Burns: Such training is primarily the responsibility of the relevant professional bodies and of the organisations which employ health and social care professionals.

Students who undertake pre-registration nursing programmes in adult or mental health nursing gain an understanding of the various forms of dementia and the care and treatment of people with dementia, including Alzheimer's disease.

The Department has contributed funding towards the provision of training material on dementia for mental health professionals. We commissioned Manchester university to produce training literature in mental health, including specific guidance on older people with mental health problems. We helped the Alzheimer's Disease Society with the production costs of its recent training pack for general practitioner trainers, "Dementia in the Community: management strategies for general practice". The Department also contributed funding to a recent feasibility study led by the British Medical Association into an educational video for GPs on dementia.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of people suffering from Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia (a) at present and (b) for the year 2006. [3274]

Mr. Burns: We estimate that there were around 600,000 people with a diagnosis of dementia, including Alzheimer's disease, in 1994, which will rise to 652,000 in 2006.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current state of research (a) funded and (b) evaluated by his Department into Alzheimer's disease and other forms of dementia. [3275]

Mr. Burns: The Department runs two separate research programmes: the policy research programme and the national health service research and development programme. The latest available information on research being carried out under the policy research programme is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are in the Library.

The NHS research and development programme consists of a number of national programmes and regional research activity. The mental health programme includes a project examining the development of screening tests for dementia and depression in ethnic elders; it also includes a project which is examining dementia information in order to develop a model to establish the number of people in a given population needing specific dementia services. Information is not available centrally on all the regional research projects being undertaken. The projects on which information is available centrally include a study of the patterns and consequences of semantic memory impairment in Alzheimer's disease; a community–based control study of dementias; a study of neuronal structure in aging and Alzheimer's based dementia; and cognitive decline, dementia and aging in people with Down's syndrome: a study of the risk factors and care needs.

NHS Information Management Group

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by the national health service information management group in each of the last three years on consultancy fees; to which organisations it has been paid; and for what purposes. [3288]

Mr. Horam: The spend on consultancy fees from vote 2 of Department of Health budgets by the information management group in the last three years is as follows:

1996–97: £3 million (estimated)

1995–96: £4.8 million

1994–95: £4.1 million

These fees were paid for consultancy in support of the information management and technology strategy across a number of projects. Many consultancy firms and individuals were employed during this time and a breakdown by individual firms and projects can be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Tay-Sachs Disease

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funding his Department has made available for research into Tay-Sachs disease. [3061]

Mr. Horam: Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and "The Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Prodigy Pilot Study

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of the extension of the Prodigy pilot study on (a) inward investment by non-United Kingdom-owned pharmaceutical companies, (b) research and development expenditure by the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry, (c) export performance by the United Kingdom pharmaceutical industry and (d) the introduction in the United Kingdom of new medicines; and if he will make a statement. [3294]

Mr. Malone: None.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what consultations there were with patient groups over the drafting of the patient advice leaflets provided in the Prodigy pilot study; and if he will make a statement; [3290]

(2) when the steering group of the NHS executive's patient partnership initiative was consulted about the recommendations on prescribing in the Prodigy pilot study and the contents of the patient advice leaflets; and if he will make a statement; [3295]

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that the prescribing recommendations in the Prodigy pilot study (a) are up-to-date, (b) are fully evaluated and (c) have as their primary purpose the greatest possible improvement in patient health; and if he will make a statement. [3432]

Mr. Malone: Prodigy is a research project to assess the value and acceptability of decision support for general practitioners. The prescribing recommendations and patient advice leaflets for the pilot were derived from respected sources including the British National Formulary and validated by a multi-professional group.

Formal consultation at this stage would not have been appropriate, although we are in discussion with a number of interested parties about possible enhancements for the next phase of the project. The Department recently held a seminar, chaired by the chief medical officer, to look at which processes could be used to develop the therapeutic guidance and advice leaflets if it is ultimately decided to implement a national decision support system. A large measure of agreement was reached on the basis of a process which would be transparent, open and professional and reflect the latest evidence-based information. The seminar was attended by professional interests, patient groups, NHS management and the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total cost to date of the Prodigy pilot study; how this cost is broken down; what estimates he has made of the cost to his Department of phases 2 and 3 of the study; and what estimate he has made of the cost of extending the project to all United Kingdom general practices. [3293]

Mr. Malone: The total cost to date is £1,900,000. Costs for phase 2 are currently being negotiated. Any decision on future roll-out will be taken in light of the research findings which will also indicate the likely costs.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on patient care and the results of treatment of implementing the recommendations of the Prodigy pilot study about prescribing; and what further steps he is taking to assess the impact. [3287]

Mr. Malone: Prodigy is a three-year research and development project the results of which will not be known until late 1997.

Health Strategy Committee

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many times the Ministerial Sub-Committee on Health Strategy has met in the last three years; on how many of these occasions "The Health of the Nation" targets have been discussed; when the last meeting took place; and when the next meeting is scheduled. [3298]

Mr. Horam: The Ministerial Sub-Committee on Health Strategy, EDH(H), has met seven times in the last three years. EDH(H)'s terms of reference are: to oversee the development, implementation and monitoring of the Government's health strategy, to co-ordinate the Government's policies on United Kingdom-wide issues affecting health, and report as necessary to the Ministerial Committee on Home and Social Affairs. "The Health of the Nation" targets were discussed on all occasions. The last meeting was on 18 June 1996. The next meeting has not yet been scheduled.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing and residential homes there are in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales. [3273]

Mr. Burns: At 31 March 1995, there were 16,320 local authority and registered residential care homes with four or more places, 5,540 registered residential homes with less than four places and 5,330 registered private nursing care homes in England. The numbers of homes in Scotland and in Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales respectively.

Steroids

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it mandatory for warnings on the hazards associated with steroid treatment to be issued with each steroid prescription. [3057]

Mr. Malone: This is already mandatory.

Duplicate NHS Numbers

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many duplicate NHS numbers have been issued to date; if further duplicate numbers are being issued; what progress has been made towards correcting the duplicate number problem and renumbering persons issued with duplicate numbers; what has been the total cost to date of the duplicate number problem; and what estimate he has made of the final cost. [3297]

Mr. Horam: National health service numbers issued by registrars of births and deaths are provisional until confirmed through health authorities on a patient's medical card.

Between 4 December 1995, when the new NHS number was introduced, and 18 October 1996, the latest date for which figures are available, 4,793 new NHS numbers were assigned by RBDs which were re-issued at a subsequent birth registration. This is approximately 1 per cent. of all registrations. Whenever an NHS number is erroneously re-issued, at least two registrations are affected; occasionally numbers have been re-issued more than once, thereby affecting three or more registrations.

Duplicate numbers continued to be issued at birth registration, but at a reduced rate. In the reply I gave the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on 8 July, Official Report, column 14, it was confirmed that a study into the reasons for the issuing of duplicate numbers would be carried out. That study is now complete, and a copy of its final report is due to be placed in the Library shortly.

If a duplicate number is issued at birth registration, this is detected at the NHS central register. In this circumstance, the duplicated number is not used for either baby; both are issued with unique replacement NHS numbers. This also applies if more than two babies have been issued with the same number.

The cost to date to the new NHS number programme of addressing the issue of non-unique NHS numbers is £40,000; the expected final cost is £130,000.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his Department's proposals for reductions in the budget of the public health laboratory service; and which services will be affected. [3408]

Mr. Horam: The public health laboratory service received funding of £55.2 million directly from the Department of Health for 1996–97. As with all Government bodies, the public health laboratory service is expected to achieve efficiency savings each year, and the level of these savings is reviewed annually. Funding for 1997–98 will be notified shortly after the Chancellor's "Autumn Statement".

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has for the future of the public health laboratory service; and if he will make a statement. [3419]

Mr. Horam: I announced on 19 July that a prior options review of the public health laboratory service had recently begun, that interested parties would be invited to comment and that the review would report to Ministers in December. The period of consultation drew to a close last week, and comments from a wide range of organisations, including professional bodies, are now being analysed.

Child Labour

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the procedures are for liaison between his Department and other Government Departments with responsibilities in the area of child labour. [3683]

Mr. Burns: The Department maintains close links with other Government Departments as part of its everyday business.

Correspondence

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the replies which he received to his letter of 7 November to all Labour Members. [3688]

Mr. Dorrell: The letters referred to were sent out in my capacity as a Member of Parliament and not as the Secretary of State for Health.

Personal Social Services

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made on the proposed new initiative to encourage better use of research evidence in the purchasing and provision of personal social services. [3971]

Mr. Burns: The aim of this new initiative is to help local authorities improve the cost-effectiveness of social services through better use of research evidence. I am very pleased to say that contractual terms have now been agreed, and contracts are likely to be signed very shortly with Exeter university and a consortium of 12 directors of social services in the south-west of England for this jointly funded initiative, beginning in January 1997.

Dental Services

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 1024, what was the number of dentists in England providing NHS treatment on 30 June 1995. [4049]

Mr. Malone: I regret that my reply, which quoted 15,927 dentists in the general dental services in England at 30 June 1995, was incorrect. That is the figure for June 1996. The correct number for June 1995 is 15,616.

Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to ensure health professionals are informed of the methods of recognising and treating attention deficit and hyperactivity disorder now employed in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [2504]

Mr. Burns: It is the responsibility of professional and academic bodies to assess the evidence for the best approaches in the recognition and treatment of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. This evidence is available in literature from around the world, including the United States, and is widely available in professional journals within this country.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on use of advice issued to child psychiatrists in respect of treatment of hyperactivity and of the flow chart attached; what plans he has to review the efficacy of such advice; and if he will make a statement. [2505]

Mr. Burns: None. It is for the relevant professional and academic bodies to review and evaluate evidence for the treatment of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder and to disseminate such information through training and through publications in professional journals and texts.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to examine the practice among medical practitioners of giving up the use of Ritalin among children suffering from attention deficit and hyperactivity disorder after 12 months' use; and if he will make a statement. [2506]

Mr. Burns: The use of Ritalin to treat children suffering from attention deficit hyperactivity disorder is a matter for professional and clinical judgment and we have no plans to examine it.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the number of children identified as suffering from hyperkinetic disorder; and what percentage this is of his estimate of the total number of persons suffering from this disorder. [2507]

Mr. Burns: Information on the number of children identified as suffering from hyperkinetic disorder is not collected centrally.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's latest assessment of the effectiveness of dopamine-releasing agents with special reference to Ritalin, in the treatment of attention deficit and hyperactivity disorder; what is his assessment of the use currently made of such treatment in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement. [2508]

Mr. Burns: We recognise that the more severe forms of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder can be treated with Ritalin or other appropriate medication. Such medication should be part of a comprehensive treatment programme which may also include psychological, educational and social measures designed to stabilise children with the condition. There is a widespread view among clinicians in this country that a higher percentage of such children are treated with medication in the United States than is desirable or necessary.

Coronary Care

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) medical receiving room and (b) minor accident treatment service units capable of dealing with coronary care. [3515]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations his Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1996; if he proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to determine the advantages and disadvantages of such a repeal. [3780]

Mr. Horam: The Department currently proposes to repeal or amend the following regulations by the end of 1996:

The Imported Food Regulations 1984;

The Food Safety (General Food Hygiene) Regulations 1995;

The Nursing Homes and Mental Nursing Homes Regulations 1984.

Since the effect in each case will be to reduce, rather than increase, compliance costs, a compliance cost assessment is not required. Departments do, however, seek to estimate approximate savings wherever possible and, where there is a potential impact on industry, a CCA is completed in all cases. The cost of undertaking a CCA varies from case to case but it is generally modest. Because part of the cost falls on the businesses consulted, a full CCA would be inappropriate for measures designed to reduce business burdens.

Silicon Bridge Research

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 293, if he will place in the Library a copy of the Silicon Bridge Research report. [3669]

Mr. Horam: The Silicon Bridge Research report will be published shortly. Copies will be placed in the Library.

CAMS Ltd.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 293, which parts of the CAMS contract with his Department have recently been terminated; and if he will make a statement. [3670]

Mr. Horam: No parts of the CAMS contracts with the Department of Health for the licensing and support of Read codes in the national health service, and for their licensing and support internationally, have been terminated recently.

Neonatal and Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) neonatal and (b) perinatal mortality rates for the last four years by (i) trust, (ii) health authority and (iii) region. [2668]

Mrs. Angela Knight: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Alan Keen, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question requesting neonatal and perinatal rates for the last four years by (a) trust, (b) health authority and (c) region.

The information by health authority and region for the last four years is available in OPCS/ONS Monitors DH3 93/1 (1992), DH3 94/2 (1993) DH3 95/2 (1994) AND DH3 96/1 (1995), copies of which are available in the House of the Commons Library.

Neonatal and perinatal mortality statistics by hospital trust is not routinely available and can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Taxpayers

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers paid tax at the lower and basic rates between 1992–93 and 1996–97. [3972]

Mr. Jack: The figures are set out in the table. Over a quarter of taxpayers now have a marginal rate of only 20 per cent.

Notes:
[1]Provisional.

EU Budget Council

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the EU Budget Council meeting of 25 July. [3973]

Mr. Oppenheim: Sir Stephen Wall, the United Kingdom permanent representative to the European Union, represented the United Kingdom at the Budget Council on 25 July. The Council considered the Commission's preliminary draft budget for 1997. The draft budget established by the Council totalled 88.5 billion ecu—£69.2 billion—in commitment appropriations and 81.6 billion ecu—£63.9 billion—in payment appropriations. The draft budget would require own resources totalling 1.15 per cent. of Community gross national product, compared with the own resources ceiling of 1.24 per cent. of Community GNP. The draft budget is within the financial perspective ceilings.

For the first time ever, the Council set its draft budget at the same level overall as in the preceding year—that is, zero growth.

In establishing its draft budget the Council took account of the economic and financial context for 1997 to define real priorities within the resources available and to ensure that this was reflected in a realistic budget.

The Council established its 1997 draft budget by a qualified majority with Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Austria voting against. No other formal votes were taken.

The summary table below compares the outcome of the Budget Council to the proposals in the Commission's amended preliminary draft budget by reference to the financial perspective ceilings.

(Further information is contained in the explanatory memorandum (9372/96) on the draft budget, which was deposited in the UK Parliament on 11 October.)

The European Parliament considered the draft budget for 1997 at its plenary in October. The Parliament's amendments and modifications will be considered at the second Budget Council on 19 November. The European Parliament's Second Reading is likely to be in mid-December.

Inheritance Tax Exemption

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of inheritance tax for which conditional exemption has been granted to allow public access to land for each year since 1975. [1647]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 November 1996]: The annual average cost, in the years 1983–84 to 1995–96, of conditional exemption from inheritance tax—or its predecessor, capital transfer tax—for land and buildings is estimated at between £5 million and £10 million. Figures for earlier years are not available.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many sites in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales have been granted conditional exemption from inheritance tax on the basis of reasonable public access being granted; and what is the area of each site. [1648]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 29 March, Official Report, column 777.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library copies of any statements made since 1979 setting out Government policies and practices which outline the granting and publicising of conditional exemption from inheritance tax in return for reasonable public access. [1649]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 November 1996]: The Government's various statements to the House on the topics in question are already a matter of public record. I am arranging for copies of the Inland Revenue's publications about conditional exemption, booklets IR 67, "Capital taxation and the national heritage", and IR 88, "Capital tax relief for national heritage property—how to make a claim", to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many locations granted conditional exemption from inheritance tax on condition of allowing reasonable public access have been included in the annual register of countryside stewardship scheme access sites in each of the past five years; [1625]

(2) how many sites in the register of countryside stewardship scheme access sites received funding through the granting of conditional exemption of inheritance tax on the basis of reasonable public access for each of the last five years. [1628]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 November 1996]: In return for conditional exemption from inheritance tax, the owners have to give undertakings which cover not only provision of reasonable public access but the maintenance and preservation of the land. There have been 11 areas of conditionally exempt scenic land included with the countryside stewardship scheme access sites since 1993, when such land first appeared in the records of the scheme.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his policy in respect of British membership of the Monetary Committee, appointed under article 109c of the treaty on European Union, if the United Kingdom declared against proceeding to the third stage of economic and monetary union; and to what extent the British members' powers and voting rights would be modified; [49]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom membership of the Economic and Financial Committee appointed under article 109c of the treaty on European Union of a United Kingdom declaration against proceeding to the third stage of economic and monetary union. [9]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Article 109c(1) of the EC treaty provides for the establishment of a Monetary Committee with advisory status. Its tasks include keeping under review the monetary and financial situation within the Community and preparing the work of the Council of Economic and Finance Ministers, ECOFIN, including the formulation of opinions on excessive deficits under article 104c(4) of the treaty. The United Kingdom would still participate in the Committee if the Government were to decide that the United Kingdom should not participate in the third stage of economic and monetary union. The powers and voting rights of its two members on the Committee would not be modified.

Article 109c(2) of the treaty provides for the Monetary Committee to be dissolved at the start of the third stage of EMU. It also provides for all member states, the European Commission and the European central bank to each appoint "no more than two members" to the Economic and Financial Committee. The EFC will be an advisory body. Its tasks will include keeping under review the monetary and financial situation within the Community and preparing the work of ECOFIN, including the formulation of opinions on excessive deficits under article 104c(4) of the treaty, and other tasks assigned to it by ECOFIN.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the United Kingdom's right to participate in the discussions, and vote on which countries fulfil the necessary conditions for the adoption of a single currency, as described in article 109j of the treaty on European Union, is (a) withdrawn and (b) modified if the United Kingdom decides not to join the third stage of economic and monetary union. [10]

Mrs. Knight: All member states will be able to participate and vote in the decisions under article 109j of the EC treaty on which member states fulfil the necessary conditions to adopt the single currency at the start of the third stage of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the United Kingdom is obliged to subscribe to the capital of the European central bank when it comes into being if the United Kingdom does not join the third stage of economic monetary union; and what estimate he has made of the cost of subscription. [50]

Mrs. Knight: Article 28 of the statute of the European system of central banks contained in protocol No. 3 to the EC treaty provides for the European central bank to have capital of 5,000 million ecu when it is established. The subscription to the capital by the national central banks of countries participating in the single currency will be on the basis of the key in article 29 of the statute. The ECB will, in addition to its tasks relating to the single currency and participating member states, also take over certain remaining tasks of the European Monetary Institute relating to countries not participating in the single currency. Article 48 of the statute of the ESCB provides for the possibility of non-participating member states' national central banks contributing a "minimal" share of the capital towards the operational costs of the ECB in certain circumstances. This would require a decision of the general council of the ECB on which the national central banks of non-participating member states will be represented.

Single European Currency

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the United Kingdom of converting to a single European currency; and if he will list cost estimates for each major sector of commerce, industry, Government and the general public. [11]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Government have not made any such estimates. The Government will take into account the potential costs of introducing the single currency when the facts are known and when they make their decisions on whether the United Kingdom should seek to participate in the single currency, at the appropriate time.

Self-employment Statistics

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the population in (a) the London borough of Lewisham, (b) the SOLOTEC area, (c) the wider central area, (d) Greater London and (e) the rest of southern England, were self-employed, using the labour force survey and mid-year population estimates in each of the past three years. [2300]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the proportion of the population who are self-employed in the South East.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) covers the population in private households plus persons in NHS accommodation and students in halls of residence. The mid-year population estimates additionally cover the rest of the non-household population. It is therefore more appropriate to calculate the proportions who are self employed using LFS estimates. This information can be accessed through the NOMIS database by the House of Common Library.

Mid-year population estimates taken from the Census of Population are published in Monitor—Population and Health. A copy of this publication is also available from the House of Commons Library.

Unemployment

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the proportion of male and female unemployed for (a) one year and (b) two years among the total unemployed for the latest period, and for the same period in 1995, 1994 and 1993 in (a) the London borough of Lewisham, (b) the SOLOTEC area, (c) the wider centre area, (d) Greater London and (e) the rest of the south-east; [2304]

(2) if he will list the proportion of 17 to 19-year-olds unemployed for the latest period, and the same period in 1995, 1994 and 1993 in (a) the London borough of Lewisham, (b) the SOLOTEC area, (c) the wider central area, (d) Greater London and (e) the rest of southern England. [2303]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mrs. Bridget Prentice, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on the proportion of the population who are unemployed in the South East.

Published information on the numbers of people unemployed by duration and sex for the areas requested is restricted to claimant unemployment. The corresponding analyses from the Labour Force Survey (LFS), on unemployment on the internationally standard ILO basis are not available for TEC areas such as SOLOTEC which do not match local authority boundaries. In addition figures are not available for Lewisham because they are unreliable at this level of geographical disagregation.

The LFS provides ILO unemployment rates covering all the years requested for 16–19 year olds for Greater London and ROSE but not for the other areas listed. Claimant unemployment rates at this level of disagregation are only available for travel-to-work areas and unitary authorities and are not calculated for different age groups.

The available data can be assessed through NOMIS and the LFS Database in the House of Commons Library.

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, have experienced at least one spell of unemployment since 1992, in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom, taking the new constituency boundaries, (1) as an absolute figure and (2) as a percentage of the number of people employed in the constituency using the 1993 figures in the absence of the 1995 figures in the relevant age band; [1907]

(2) what is the average length of time between claims for a claimant since 1992 (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 year, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom; [1912]

(3) what is the average number of claimants, in each constituency of the United Kingdom, (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, whose duration of unemployment became more than 12 months in each month since January 1992; [1892]

(4) how many people (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, have experienced (1) two, (2) three, (3) four and (4) five spells of unemployment, since 1992, in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom, taking the new parliamentary constituency boundaries, (x) as an absolute figure and (y) as a percentage of the number of people employed in the constituency using the 1993 figures in the absence of the 1995 figures; [1914]

(5) what is the average number of claims made by a claimant since 1992 (a) in total and (b) the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom; [1911]

(6) what is the number of claimants, in each parliamentary constituency in the United Kingdom, (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, who have cumulatively claimed for 12 months or over, since 1992, in either one continuous claim or several separate claims (1) as an absolute figure, (2) as a percentage of the economically active work force in the relevant age band and (3) as a percentage of claimants in the relevant age band. [1889]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Judith Church, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions (1889, 1892, 1907, 1911, 1912 and 1914) on unemployment spell details by parliamentary constituency.

The information requested is unavailable as the JUVOS unemployment cohort does not hold data by parliamentary constituency.

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claimants, who had been claiming for 52 weeks or more in the United Kingdom, (a) in total and (b) overall and (1) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, left the count for a job, in the year to June 1996 (1) in absolute terms and (2) as a percentage of all those who had been claiming for 52 weeks or more, in the year to June 1996. Income Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the (a) first-year and (b) full-year costs of raising the personal income tax allowance in 1997–98, in addition to price indexation, by (i) £50, (ii) £100, (iii) £150 and (iv) £200; and what is his estimate in each case of the number of individuals who as a consequence would no longer be liable to pay income tax. [3244]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Available information is given in the table.

Increase in non aged and aged personal allowances indexation £	Full year cost at 1997–98 income levels[1] £ million	First year cost at 1997–98 income levels £ million	Number of taxpayers taken out of income tax thousands
100	630	470	230
150	940	710	350
200	1,250	940	450

[1] Based on the Summer Economic forecast and allowing for statutory indexation.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in 1997–98 of reducing the present 24p income tax band to a 20p income tax band. [3243]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The estimated full-year cost at 1997–98 income levels of reducing the basic rate of tax from 24 per cent. to 20 per cent. is £6.8 billion after allowing for statutory indexation of allowances and tax band widths. This is based on the summer economic forecast.

Mr. Alison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the cost of revalorising fully the married couples allowance and the additional personal allowance to their 1990 introductory value, assuming that the allowances continue to be given at the rate of 15 per cent.; [2827]

(2) if he will estimate the cost of revalorising fully the married couples allowance and the additional personal allowance to their 1990 introductory value, assuming that the allowances were given at the taxpayers' marginal tax rate. [2825]

Mr. Jack: The full year cost of revalorising the 1990–91 married couples allowance and the linked allowances, which include the additional personal allowance and the widows bereavement allowance, to 1996–97 levels is given in the table.

	Cost in full year at 1996–97 income levels £ billion
Allowances given at 15 per cent.	0.5
Allowances given at marginal rates	3.0

Mr. Alison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of allowing a married person to transfer an unused personal allowance to their spouse, on the assumption that the couple would not also be able to claim the married couples allowance. [2824]

Mr. Jack: The estimated full-year cost of allowing personal allowances to be transferred between spouses would be about £0.5 billion at 1996–97 income levels. This assumes that the married couples allowance would be abolished, but the widows bereavement allowance and the additional personal allowance would be retained. It does not take into account any behavioural change which would result from such a measure.

Overseas Investment Services

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will instruct the Inland Revenue to review the liability of Overseas Investment Services registered in the Turks and Caicos to pay tax in the United Kingdom in respect of its management from the United Kingdom; [2650]

(2) if he will investigate the financial regularity of the circumstances in which Firthpalm Ltd. transferred ownership of land at Mayals, Swansea in 1987–88 to Overseas Investment Services; [2652]

(3) if he will instruct the Inland Revenue to examine the terms in respect of liability for tax on which in 1987–88 Firthpalm Ltd. sold land at Mayals, Swansea, to Overseas Investment Services in Grand Turks and Caicos. [2651]

Mr. Jack: The tax affairs of particular companies are confidential between the Inland Revenue and the companies concerned. Treasury Ministers do not instruct the Inland Revenue to investigate a company's tax affairs or otherwise intervene in such matters.

VAT Reclaims

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of the Waelbroeck opinion on the Government's policy to place a three-year limit on VAT reclaims. [3300]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Customs and Excise has received a copy of this opinion and has had a meeting with the firm which commissioned it. It is being considered along with other representations received on the three-year cap.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the change in the value of the pound against (a) the deutschmark, (b) the dollar and (c) all currencies since the first day of each month of 1996 to date; and if he will make a statement. [3080]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The table gives the percentage increase in the value of the pound against the deutschmark, dollar and the exchange rate index from the first day of each month to close on 6 November—when sterling stood at DM2.49, $1.64 and 91.1 on the ERI. The effective exchange rate index measures the value of sterling against a basket of other currencies on a trade-weighted basis.

Working Hours

Ms Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of employees working more than 48 hours per week in each year since 1979. [2067]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Joyce Quin, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question asking for a time series of the number of employees working more than 48 hours per week.

Landfill Tax

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the landfill operators who have registered their liability for landfill tax, broken down by Customs and Excise region. [3328]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information as requested is not currently held in a form that can be published. The Finance Act 1996 allows the commissioners of Customs and Excise to publish information from the landfill tax register and they will do so as soon as possible.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what sum of money he estimates will be paid to approve environmental bodies through the landfill tax credit scheme in the financial year (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98. [3333]

Mr. Oppenheim: It is estimated that £10 million will be made available through landfill tax credits in 1996–97 and £50 million in 1997–98.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the figures for the average tenure per job in (a) manufacturing, (b) services and (c) general for (i) 1966, (ii) 1970, (iii) 1980, (iv) 1990 and (v) the latest year available. [2815]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the average tenure per job in manufacturing, services and all industries and services.

Information showing the length of time continuously employed is available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) from 1984. However, of the periods requested, it is only possible to provide accurate averages at Spring 1996. The information is provided in the following tables.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the figures for the change in the level of (a) employment, (b) male unemployment and (c) female unemployment since (i) November 1990 and (ii) December 1992; [2826]

(2) if he will give figures for the change in the level of part-time (a) male, (b) female and (c) total employment and part-time employment since (i) autumn 1990 and (ii) winter 1992–93; [2821]

(3) if he will give figures for the change in the level of full-time (a) total, (b) male and (c) female employment and full-time employment since (i) November 1990 and (ii) December 1992. [2822]

Mrs. Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 12 November:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply to the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions for the changes in the levels of employment and unemployment.

Information showing the levels of employment and unemployment, broken down by full and part-time, is available from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). Information on employment is published in Table 2 of both the LFS Historical Supplement 1984–1996 and the October 1996 LFS First Release. Information on unemployment is published in Table 20 of the historical supplement and Table 9 of the First Release. Information on the number of people who are looking for work as either full or part-time employees is published in Table 28 of both the historical supplement and the LFS Quarterly Bulletin, which is next published on 18th December. Copies of these publications are available in the House of Commons Library.

The claimant unemployment count does not distinguish between full-and part-time unemployment. Monthly seasonally adjusted counts of unemployment are available from the NOMIS database which can be accessed through the House of Commons Library.

Entrust

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff are employed by Entrust and in what positions; and how many further staff appointments will be made and in what positions. [3332]

Mr. Oppenheim: Currently, Entrust employs only an acting chief executive. He will shortly be taking on a secretary. Further staff appointments will be made on the basis of need.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many organisations have enrolled with Entrust as appropriate bodies to receive funding from landfill operators through the landfill tax credits system under the environmental trust scheme to the latest available date. [3331]

Mr. Oppenheim: No bodies have yet enrolled. Application forms will be issued shortly to those that have expressed an interest in enrolment.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the further directors appointed to the environmental bodies regulatory body Entrust, in addition to the appointments announced on 16 October 1996. [3329]

Mr. Oppenheim: In addition to the appointments announced on 16 October, two further people have accepted invitations to join the board of Entrust: Mr. Neil Caldwell, of the Prince's Trust and the Welsh Language Board, and Mr. Donald Reid, a Scottish solicitor.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many organisations have made representations regarding enrolment with Entrust as appropriate bodies to receive funding from landfill operators through the landfill tax credits system under the environmental trust scheme to the latest available date. [3330]

Mr. Oppenheim: As of Monday 4 November, Entrust had received 216 inquiries, of which approximately 85 per cent. were from organisations interested in enrolling.

Births

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many live births there were in each of the last 15 years in Great Britain. [2951]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Frank Field, dated 12 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question asking for the number of live births that occurred in Great Britain in each of the last fifteen years.

Live births in Great Britain

1995	708,189

Civil Service Relocations

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he takes to monitor the impact of civil service relocations on individual localities. [1306]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Central considerations for relocation are cost savings, employment and economic benefits.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cetaceans (Protection)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of harbour porpoises which died as a consequence of the use of monofilament nets in British waters in the last three years; and what international agreements the United Kingdom has agreed to, to ensure the protection of this and other smaller cetacean species. [2340]

Mr. Baldry: No reliable estimate for harbour porpoise deaths in British waters caused by monofilament nets is available. To help address this question, the Ministry is sponsoring the sea mammals research unit to develop a robust cetacean by-catch reporting scheme. SMRU is also a leading partner in an EC-funded project which will document levels of cetacean by-catch in the North sea and evaluate the likely effectiveness of a number of different management approaches aimed at reducing these by-catches.

The UK is party to or subject to several international instruments which include measures to protect small cetaceans. They include the EC habitats directive, Council directive 92/43/EEC; the agreement on the conservation of small cetaceans of the Baltic and North seas, ASCOBANS; the convention on the conservation of European wildlife and natural habitats, the Bern convention; the convention on the conservation of migratory species of wild animals, the Bonn convention; and the convention on international trade in endangered species, CITES.

Varroa Jacobsoni

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which areas of the country are currently assessed as being infected with varroa jacobsoni. [3597]

Mr. Boswell: The areas currently within the statutory infected area include all of Wales and England up to but not including the following counties: Greater Manchester, Lancashire, Cumbria, Northumberland and Tyne and Wear. During the recent search, outbreaks have also been discovered in Cumbria and Greater Manchester, but no decision has yet been taken on any changes to the extent of the SIA.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to offer subsides to beekeepers to assist with the diagnosis and control of varroa mites on bees. [3594]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry already provides a free testing and diagnosis service for varroa. The cost of treatment is borne by beekeepers.

Mr. Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of varroasis have been reported to his Department in each year since April 1992. [3595]

Mr. Boswell: The annual numbers of varroa positive apiaries reported to the Ministry since April 1992 are as follows:

Year	Number of cases
1992	305
1993	600
1994	610
1995	988
Up to and including September 1996	811

Cumulative total 3,314.

BSE

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the expenditure committed to support the agricultural industry as a result of the bovine spongiform encephalopathy crisis, and the proportion of such expenditure which derives form the European Union; [3394]

(2) if he will list, by sector, the expenditure committed as a result of the BSE crisis, separately identifying that paid to (a) abattoirs, (b) the rendering industry, (c) collection centres and (d) farmers direct; [3395]

(3) if he will list (a) the methods by which compensation has been directed to farmers as a result of the BSE crisis, (b) the level of expenditure under these headings and (c) the amount of each expenditure item that is recoverable from the European Union. [3396]

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 24 July, Official Report, column 533. Subsequent to that reply, additional expenditure has been agreed as follows:

Approximately £160 million from EU funds for direct support to UK beef producers. Over £100 million has already been disbursed through supplementary payments to the beef special premium and suckler cow premium schemes and through the beef marketing payments scheme.

Some £89 million from national funds for direct support to UK beef producers. £60 million of this sum has ben earmarked for distribution to eligible cattle producers under the 1997 hill livestock compensatory allowances scheme.

£16.6 million for extra cold storage capacity to help reduce the backlog of animals awaiting slaughter under the over-30 month scheme.

A detailed breakdown of the latest BSE expenditure forecasts will be given in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's forthcoming Budget statement.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the impact of the BSE crisis on prices paid to farmers for beef cattle. [2451]

Mr. Boswell: Market prices for finished beef cattle in England and Wales have fallen by 15 per cent. to 20 per cent. since the middle of March. There have been greater price reductions for some store cattle and calves. These developments are likely to be attributable to a number of factors, some of them of a seasonal nature. It is not possible separately to identify the impact of BSE. Intervention purchases and measures announced by the Government have had the effect of limiting the extent of price reductions in the beef market and the impact on producers.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations his Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1996; if he proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to determine the advantages and disadvantages of such a repeal. [3781]

Mr. Boswell: This Ministry has already repealed or simplified a large number of regulations this year. Further measures are planned for next year. Since the effect of repealing or simplifying regulations reduces rather than increases compliance costs, CCAs are not produced. The cost of undertaking a CCA varies from case to case but is generally modest. Because part of the cost falls on the businesses consulted, a full CCA is inappropriate for measures designed to reduce business burdens.

Food Labelling

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the interim report by the Food Advisory Committee on nutritional labelling and health claims; and if he will make a statement. [3590]

Mrs. Browning: The Food Advisory Committee has not been asked to make an interim report on these matters. It is currently reviewing functional foods and health claims and is due to consider the issues again at its December meeting.

Beef Farmers' Incomes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the reduction in beef farmers' incomes since 20 March. [2583]

Mr. Boswell: Incomes of beef farmers in hill and upland areas are currently being considered as part of the autumn review of the economic prospects of hill farms, and forecasts of incomes for 1996–97 will be deposited in the Library of the House on 26 November.

Estimates of 1996–97 incomes by type of farm for all farms in the United Kingdom will be published in a press notice on 31 January 1997.

Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans his Department has to bring the level at which agricultural holdings are deemed to be economically viable in line with Department of Social Security assessments of personal economic need; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the advantages of such changes. [3235]

Mr. Boswell: The Department does not define any specific level of economic viability for agricultural holdings and there are no plans to introduce one.

Planning Guidelines

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of giving additional weight to environmental impact in determining planning restrictions on agricultural buildings. [3363]

Mr. Boswell: Planning authorities are already able to take full account of the environmental aspects of development proposals involving agricultural holdings.

British Beef

Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken since 1 August to persuade the major supermarkets and fast-food retail organisations to (a) use and (b) promote United Kingdom beef; and if he will make a statement. [1629]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 5 November 1996]: In July, I launched an initiative aimed at restoring consumer confidence in British beef, which I believe needs to start with understanding the concerns of customers and consumers. As a part of this initiative, my officials and I have held a number of discussions with leading supermarkets and fast-food businesses about the measures which the Government have taken to protect public health, and the further steps needed to restore confidence in beef. We have also held seminars with important industry groups.

Forestry Commission (Land Sales)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the plots of Forestry Commission land in Hampshire in each of the last five years which (a) were sold and (b) were offered for sale, specifying in each case (i) which were sold without public access protected, (ii) the size of the plot and (iii) what consultation was undertaken in advance of the sale;[1968]

(2) if he will list the plots of Forestry Commission land in Hampshire which are currently for sale, specifying in each case the size of the plot and the consultation process to be undertaken in advance of the sale. [1969]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 4 November 1996]: The subjects of the questions relate to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. Gordon Cowie, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Gordon M. Cowie to Mr. John Denham, dated 12 November 1996:

The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has asked me to reply to your two Questions about Forestry Commission land in Hampshire.[1968] [1969].

1. At Annex A I enclose a list of woodlands sold in Hampshire since 1991. There were no other cases offered for sale during this period. None of these cases were sold with public access protected.

2. At Annex B I enclose a list of land currently for sale, either on the Open Market or by Negotiation.

All the properties listed were notified in the Estates Gazette, and the appropriate consultations with the Local Authority took place in accordance with the Continued Public Access arrangements and Sponsorship procedures. These are explained in the Commission's Access Guidelines, a copy of which is enclosed for your information. A copy is already in the House of Commons Library.

Beef (Emergency Control) Order 1996

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions have been initiated against individuals claimed to be flouting article 2 of the Beef (Emergency Control) Order 1996—statutory instrument 1996/961—and the subsequent amendments. [816]

Mr. Boswell [holding answer 6 November 1996]: This Department has not, to date, initiated any prosecutions under the article 2 of the Beef (Emergency Control) Order 1996 or its replacement orders, the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) Regulations 1996 and the Fresh Meat (Beef Controls) (No. 2) Regulations 1996.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisoners (Costs)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the current annual costs of keeping a prisoner in each of Northern Ireland's prisons; and what are the current average costs in England and Wales and Scotland. [2737]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject of these questions has been delegated to the Northern Ireland Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Shannon to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 11 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the current annual cost of keeping a prisoner in each of Northern Ireland's prisons.

The latest available figures relate to the last financial year (1995/96) and are:

HMP Belfast	67,023
HMP Maze	78,388
HMP Magilligan	68,802
HMP Maghaberry	84,579
HM YOC	63,597

Forestry Grants

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for increased financial provision in respect of proposals to increase the forest cover in the United Kingdom; what percentage of this provision is planned to be spent before May 1997; and if he will make a statement. [1846]

Mr. Ancram: Uptake under the forestry grant schemes in Northern Ireland has increased over the past five years from around 500 ha in 1991–92 to more than 800 ha in 1995–96. Expenditure in 1995–96 was some £1.1 million and is expected to be just under £1.2 million in 1996–97. Future spending will be determined following the conclusion of the 1996 public expenditure round. Approximately 10 per cent. of annual provision is spent in each of the first two months of the financial year.

Local Exchange Trading Schemes

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the desirability of providing financial aid and incentives to encourage rural local authorities to set up specific local exchange trading schemes to help farmers during the BSE crisis; and if he will make a statement. [2310]

Mr. Ancram: There have been no representations to the Department to suggest that local exchange trade schemes would be of use.

Beach Materials (Cloghy)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what permission has been given for the removal of sand and rock from the beach at Cloghy, County Down; and if he will make a statement about the removal of beach materials. [2399]

Mr. Moss: None. Much of Cloghy beach is held by Ards borough council under lease from the Crown Estate Commissioners. The removal of sand and rock is therefore a matter for the council.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the rocks on the beach at Cloghy, County Down form part of a breakwater; and what erosion there is at the beach near No. 9 Manser road, Cloghy. [2400]

Mr. Moss: I understand that, while there are several small isolated lengths of rock armour along the beach at Cloghy, which offer some protection to the adjacent sea wall, no such rock armour is present opposite to 9 Manser road, where a grassed area separates the beach from the road. I am also advised that the area in question is in private ownership.

Stalking Legislation

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultation he has undertaken with the Home Secretary in order to have Northern Ireland included in the proposed stalking legislation. [2454]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 23 July 1996, Official Report, column 256. The separate Northern Ireland consultation paper was published in September, with a closing date for comments of 2 December. When all these have been received, I shall consider what legislation is required for Northern Ireland and how best to proceed.

Fair Employment (Teachers)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many teaching jobs otherwise exempted form the fair employment legislation are required, by the internal guidelines of (a) the five education and library boards and (b) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools to have appointments made under fair employment procedures. [2458]

Mr. Ancram: The guidance procedures to be used in individual cases is a matter for the relevant employing authority, and details are not available centrally.

Waiting Times

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were referred by general practitioners for (a) orthopaedic operations, (b) coronary bypass surgery and (c) coronary angiograms in each health and social services trust in Northern Ireland (i) between 1 April and 30 September 1996 and (ii) between 1 April 1995 and 31 March 1996; how many of those in (a) have been placed on a waiting list; how long they have been waiting; and what is the expected date for their operations. [2387]

Mr. Moss: General practitioners usually refer patients for consultant out-patient appointments in the first instance, with decisions regarding any subsequent action, including a decision to place on a waiting list for treatment, being taken following assessment at a consultant out-patient clinic.

In the year ending 31 March 1996—latest figures available—there were 24,440 GP written referrals for out-patient appointments in the trauma and orthopaedics specialty and 7,676 in the cardiology specialty. Patients are not referred by GPs for coronary angiograms. The procedure which an individual patient may require is not determined until he/she is seen by the cardiologist at the first appointment. The latter information is not available centrally. In the cardiac surgery specialty, there were 823 consultant referrals for out-patient appointments. GPs do not refer directly to the cardiac surgery specialty—they refer patients to a cardiologist in the first instance. It is not possible to break down these overall Northern Ireland figures into the particular trust wherein the referring GPs are located.

The numbers of those waiting for a first out-patient appointment at 31 March 1996 in these specialties, together with the time waiting for those who had not cancelled an appointment offered or who had not failed to attend such an appointment are given in the table:

Specialty	Total	Patients who had cancelled or failed to attend a previous appointment	Patients who has not cancelled or failed to attend a previous appointment	Time waiting of those who had not cancelled or failed to attend[1]
				< 6 mths per cent.	> 6–12 mths per cent.	> 12 mths + per cent.
Orthopaedics	3,010	602	2,408	82	9	9
Cardiology	1,783	239	1,544	97	3	1
Cardiac Surgery	74	19	55	42	36	22

[1] Percentages may not sum to 100 per cent. as a result of rounding. Percentages exclude a small proportion of cases where waiting time for admission was not known.

The waiting times for admissions of elective in-patients in the trauma and orthopaedics specialty during the year ending 31 March 1996 are given in the table, with the waiting times for admission of those elective in-patients whose primary procedures in the same period were coronary bypass surgery or coronary angiogram.

Specialty	Total	Waiting time for admission[1]
		<6 months Per cent.	>6 <12 months Per cent.	>12 months Per cent.
Trauma and orthopaedics procedure	8,988	73	21	6
Coronary bypass	713	65	28	6
Angiogram	974	97	2	(<1)

[1] Percentages may not sum to 100 per cent. as a result of rounding. Percentages exclude a small proportion of cases where waiting time for admission was not known.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the length of national health service waiting lists in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [2389]

Mr. Moss: The table shows that between 30 June 1995 and 30 June 1996—the latest available figures—the overall number waiting for treatment changed very little.

	Number waiting for first appointment	For ordinary admission	For day case admission
June 1995	67,750	21,070	14,688
June 1996	62,765	21,687	16,890

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he will take to reduce the waiting lists for coronary angiograms in each of the health and social services trusts in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [2388]

Mr. Moss: Information is not available on waiting lists for individual procedures. However, the table gives the number of elective in-patients who had coronary angiograms as their primary procedure in the last three years and the time they had to wait between the decision to admit them to hospital and the date of their admission. The table shows that there has been a 20 per cent. increase in the number of angiograms performed over this period.

Coronary angiograms

	Total	Waiting time for admission[1] 6 months Per cent.	6 to 12 months Per cent.	12 months + Per cent.
1993–94	814	95	5	(–1)
1994–95	799	96	3	1
1995–96	974	97	2	(–1)

[1] Percentages may not sum to 100 per cent. as a result of rounding. Percentages exclude a small proportion of cases where waiting time for admission was not known.

Blood Spreading

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the cause of the unusual smell at Ballymaglaff road, Comber; what substances have been spread on that land; and if he will make a statement. [2444]

Mr. Ancram: I understand that the smell at Ballymaglaff road, Comber arose from the spreading of blood on land.

The practice of spreading blood on land as an agricultural fertiliser is an acceptable method of disposal.

Educational Qualifications

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps his Department is taking to ensure that the Irish Republic gives full mutual recognition to educational qualifications obtained in Northern Ireland; and what issues are outstanding. [2456]

Mr. Ancram: The Republic of Ireland is currently establishing new arrangements for the certification of vocational and other qualifications. Officials of my Department have initiated contact with their counterparts and will be raising issues relating to mutual recognition.

Queen's Speech

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which of the Bills announced in the Queen's Speech and not yet published will include Northern Ireland in their extent; and what were the reasons for not including Northern Ireland in the others. [2453]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Excluding the two Scottish measures in the Queen's Speech, nine of the remaining 12 Bills will apply wholly or in part to Northern Ireland. The nine Bills in question are: the Benefit Fraud Bill, the Compensation Recovery Bill, the Crime (Sentences) Bill, the Decommissioning Bill, the Education Bill, the Merchant Shipping and Maritime Security Bill, the National Heritage Bill, the Police Bill and the Primary Health Care Bill.

The possibility of extending the Firearms (Amendment) Bill to Northern Ireland is still being considered.

Students

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the effect on the number of students from the Irish Republic attending colleges in Northern Ireland of the introduction of free tuition in the Republic. [2457]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Local Government Structure

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to review Northern Ireland's local government structure so as to reform the functions and powers of the district councils in line with the proposed rearrangements for the education and library boards. [2627]

Mr. Moss: The Government keep the arrangements for local government in Northern Ireland under continual review. I see no case at present for reforming the functions and powers of district councils.

IRA

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the implications for his policies on peace and reconciliation of the IRA's continuing activities. [2628]

Mr. Ancram: The Government's declared aim is to achieve peace, prosperity and reconciliation in Northern Ireland by pursuing a range of complementary policies, including the search for a comprehensive political settlement which can command widespread support. This has been and will continue to be the Government's policy, irrespective of the level of IRA activity.

Stormont Talks

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the progress of the talks at Castle buildings, Stormont. [2637]

Mr. Ancram: The participants have all made clear their total and absolute commitment to the principles of democracy and non-violence set out in paragraph 20 of the report of the international body; they have agreed rules of procedure, established a business committee and settled the agenda for the remainder of the opening plenary. They are currently addressing proposals regarding the decommissioning of illegal weapons.

The talks process provides the best opportunity for a generation of reaching a comprehensive and widely acceptable political settlement which could underpin lasting peace in Northern Ireland.

Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were made in respect of the special programme for agriculture and rural development—SPARD—from 22 March 1995 to 24 March 1995; how many have been approved; and of these how many have received payments. [2708]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 5,380 applications were received under the sub-programme for agriculture and rural development on 23 and 24 March 1995; 4,760 have been approved to date and, of these, 610 farmers have received payment of grant.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to expedite outstanding payments in respect of the special programme for agriculture and rural development in respect of applications which were forwarded between 22 March and 24 March. [2706]

Mr. Ancram: Claims for grant based on applications received on 23 or 24 March 1995 have, since 1 April 1996, been held in date order of receipt and will be paid in this order as financial resources permit. Nevertheless, the Department will make a special effort to make early payments in cases where there are exceptional circumstances. The expenditure on the SPARD schemes is monitored on a monthly basis, and if it becomes clear that the funds available are in excess of that required to pay all of the claims based on applications received prior to 23 March 1995, the balance will be used to pay the outstanding claims arising from applications received on 23 or 24 March 1995.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were made in respect of the special programme for agriculture and rural development from 1 April 1994 to its suspension on 22 March 1995; of these how many were approved; and what was the total cost of the approved schemes. [2707]

Mr. Ancram: Some 5,635 applications were received under the sub-programme for agriculture and rural development from the date the scheme opened on 14 November 1994 up to 22 March 1995; 5,586 applications have been approved and the total cost of the approved applications is £31.5 million.

Neonatal and Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Keen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the (a) neonatal and (b) perinatal mortality rates for the last four years by each health and social services board. [2669]

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

Neonatal and perinatal death rates Northern Ireland

	1992		1993		1994		1995[1]
	Neonatal	Perinatal	Neonatal	Perinatal	Neonatal	Perinatal	Neonatal	Perinatal

Dementia

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the status of the report "Dementia in Northern Ireland", to what extent it reflects Government policy on the matter; and what resources have been allocated to deal with the problem of dementia in each of the years 1993–94 to 1996–97. [3323]

Mr. Moss: "Dementia in Northern Ireland" is the report of a team brought together by the Department of Health and Social Services in 1994 to examine policy and make recommendations on the development of services. The report has been accepted by the Department and its recommendations have been adopted as the basis for its policy in this area.

Financial provision for dementia is subsumed within overall allocations to health and social services boards, and it is a matter for each board to allocate resources within its area on the basis of assessed need and competing priorities.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the incidence of dementia within each of the board areas in Northern Ireland; and what the average per capita funding has been for (a) residential care and (b) respite care in each board area during the years 1993–94 to 1995–96 in respect of dementia. [3325]

Mr. Moss: Precise information about the incidence of dementia is not available as many sufferers are not in contact with services. However, it is estimated that in 1994 there were 12,500 people in Northern Ireland suffering from the disease. The information requested on funding is not available.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resources have been allocated towards a public awareness campaign relating to dementia. [3326]

Mr. Moss: Since 1991, the Department of Health and Social Services has provided funding for the Alzheimer's Disease Society in Northern Ireland, one of whose main aims is to raise public awareness of the disease.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the respective roles of (a) his Department, (b) the boards and (c) health trusts in dealing with the problem of dementia. [3324]

Mr. Moss: The Department of Health and Social Services sets and monitors strategic plans for implementation of its policy on dementia. In drawing up the regional strategy for health and social well-being 1997 to 2002, the Department has asked boards and trusts to conduct a detailed audit during 1997 of the needs of people with dementia and the services available to meet those needs. Building on this baseline, the Department intends to establish quantifiable targets for the remainder of the strategy period.

Farmers' Income

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the changes in farmers' income in real terms for each month since January 1990; and if he will make a statement. [1583]

Mr. Ancram: Estimates of farm incomes in Northern Ireland are obtained on an annual basis from the farm business survey and are published each year in "Agriculture in the United Kingdom", "Farm Incomes in the United Kingdom", the "Statistical Review of Northern Ireland Agriculture" and "Farm Incomes in Northern Ireland", copies of which are available in the Library.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many recommendations have been made by the Government of the Irish Republic under article 6 of the Anglo–Irish Agreement in each year since it was signed; how many persons were appointed in each year as a result of those recommendations; and of these how many are still serving in each body. [1964]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 1 November 1996]:

The information now available is as follows:

Year	Number of recommendations	Number of appointments resulting from recommendations
1986	45	5
1987	21	3
1988	15	4
1989	6	4
1991	21	3
1992	34	8
1993	30	7
1994	17	2
1995	53	13

[1] Up to 30 October 1996.

Thirty-three of those appointments were still current as at 30 October 1996.

The figures for recommendations relate to nominations made rather than persons nominated. Some persons were nominated a number of times.

Orange Parade

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary are members of (i) the Orange Order and (ii) the Black Institution; and of these how many were on duty at Garvaghy road at any time during the period 6 July to 11 July. [1772]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 6 November 1996]: It is not known how many members of the RUC are members of the Orange Order or Black Institution.

RUC (Sick Leave)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the RUC were on sick leave in each week since 1 January. [1780]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 6 November 1996]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, it is possible to provide information which shows the average work days lost per member of the RUC in the first three quarters of 1996:

1 January 1996 to 31 March 1996: 3.24 days

1 April 1996 to 30 June 1996: 3.15 days

1 July 1996 to 30 September 1996: 3.61 days

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimates he has made of the sums to be spent in the current financial year, which will be contingent upon the Government gaining parliamentary consent to (a) the incorporation of the further education colleges, (b) education vouchers, and (c) its proposals on school boards. [2734]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Estimated expenditure contingent on parliamentary consent is:

(a) Nil

(b) £23,000

There are no proposals regarding school boards.

RUC

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to publish the RUC's fundamental review of policing; with whom he plans to discuss its findings; when decisions will be taken in respect of it, and by whom. [2736]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 6 November 1996]: It has been necessary to re-examine the fundamental review of policing to take account of the ending of the Provisional IRA ceasefire and the public order difficulties of the summer. Once that process is completed and the review's recommendations have been approved, I shall consult the Chief Constable and the Police Authority for Northern Ireland about when the main findings will be made public as a contribution to the wider public debate on policing. Decisions on the review will fall to the members of the tripartite structure; implementation of specific recommendations will depend upon the wider environment.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Lone Parents

8. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to help lone parents into work. [1705]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Successive changes to the benefits system have helped over 200,000 lone parents to move off income support into work since 1992. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced that from April 1997, we will be piloting a major new scheme, parent plus, which will involve the private sector and initially help up to 100,000 lone parents on income support who wish to return to work.

Social Chapter

13. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the effect on his Department's budget of the introduction of the social chapter. [1710]

Mr. Lilley: Signing the social chapter would destroy jobs and so push up my Department's expenditure on benefits to the unemployed.

Benefit Fraud Hotline

14. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many responses have been received by the benefits cheats hotline. [1711]

18. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many calls have so far been received by the beat-a-cheat hotline. [1715]

22. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what responses he has had to the beat–a–cheat hotline. [1719]

Mr. Heald: Since the launch on 5 August 1996, the number of calls to the national benefit fraud hotline have exceeded 91,000 in the first 12 weeks.

Jobseeker's Allowance

16. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what measures have been taken to monitor the effects of the new jobseeker's allowance. [1713]

Mr. Roger Evans: We have set in place an extensive programme of monitoring and evaluation, to enable us to ensure that the jobseeker's allowance is achieving its policy objectives.

State Pension

17. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had with the Government Actuary about the cost of paying the state pension from age 60 years; and if he will make a statement. [1714]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) earlier today.

Mr. Forman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received in favour of a state pension age starting at 60 years. [1695]

Mr. Heald: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State received one letter from the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms Harman) on 30 August advocating allowing people to claim state pension from age 60, but envisaging that the basic state pension would be reduced to offset the extra cost.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of the basic state pension. [?181]

Mr. Heald: I refer the hon. Member to the oral reply I gave the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) today.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which countries of the EU pay state pensions at a lower rate than the United Kingdom. [1699]

Mr. Heald: Because of the diverse nature of pension state schemes within the European Union, it is not possible to make a meaningful comparison.

Child Benefit

20. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the provision of child benefit. [1717]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: We have a manifesto commitment to pay child benefit to all families in respect of all children, and we have honoured that pledge. We believe that all families with dependent children should receive some help from either the tax or the benefit system, a principle recognised throughout Europe.

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in respect of how many children new claims for child benefit were made in each of the past 15 years; how many child benefit claims were disallowed in each of the past 15 years; and what was the estimated take-up of child benefit in each of the past 15 years. [3390]

Mr. Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Child benefit take-up rates 1981–1994

	[1] Take-up rate for children aged 1–15	[2] Take-up rate for children under age 1

1. Data are not available for 1984 due to industrial action in that year.

2. The figures include claims made on the birth of a child, claims from families entering Great Britain and repeat claims following a period of disentitlement.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

23. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received during the past six months on the effects of the reduced earnings allowance; and if he will make a statement. [1720]

Mr. Roger Evans: A number of right hon. and hon. Members have written to Ministers since the amendments to regulations from 24 March which brought in fairer rules for the transfer of people on reduced earnings allowance to retirement allowance.

26. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the numbers of people who have lost entitlement to reduced earnings allowance as a result of changes to legislation. [1723]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. However, since the amendment regulations came into force from 24 March up to the end of September, approximately 21,000 over pensionable age reduced earnings allowance recipients who have given up regular employment have transferred to retirement allowance including both reviewed cases and those attaining pension age on or after 24 March.

Housing Benefit

24. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the effectiveness of his Department's attempts to combat fraud in housing benefit. [1721]

Mr. Heald: We fully support local authorities in their efforts to prevent and detect fraud and abuse of housing benefit. In 1995–96, authorities made fraud savings of £224 million and earned £28 million in extra subsidy for their work through the incentive scheme we have introduced. In March this year, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a comprehensive strategy for tackling housing benefit fraud. We are seeking further powers to help authorities fight fraud in the benefit fraud Bill which we shall shortly lay before the House.

27. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will report on the progress of the interdepartmental review of proposed changes to housing benefit for people living in supported accommodation. [1724]

Mr. Roger Evans: The terms of reference for the Review of supported accommodation were announced on 22 October. We have discussed the role played by housing benefit in funding supported accommodation with housing providers, umbrella organisations, local authority associations and welfare rights groups throughout Great Britain. The anecdotal evidence is that housing benefit does meet charges for support which enables people to remain in the community. This is consistent with findings of qualitative research carried out by the centre for housing policy which ware published on 31 October. We have commissioned the centre for research in social policy at Loughborough university to carry out research attempting to quantify the extent of this expenditure whilst the interdepartmental review will continue to consider all aspects of the funding of supported accommodation and report upon where the sustainable balance should lie between social security and other funding sources in supported accommodation and, if necessary, clarify legislation.

Mr. Duncan Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to encourage further competition in the administration of housing and council tax benefits. [4111]

Mr. Evans: Some local authorities have expressed concern that existing legislation prevents contractors who undertake housing and council tax benefit administration from carrying out determinations of benefit entitlement. This causes unnecessary double handling of claims and reduces the efficiency of contracts which local authorities are able to negotiate. We therefore propose to allow contractors to perform such determinations. In particular, this will enable local authorities to run pilots to establish whether they would wish to see such work permanently contracted out.

This change, allied to the proposals which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has announced today for changes to the compulsory competitive tendering framework for local authority professional services and housing management, will create a climate in which local authorities are able to negotiate more efficient arrangements for the administration of these benefits.

We will open consultations shortly with the local authority associations with a view to bring forward an order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994.

Benefits Agency Medical Services

25. Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the contractorisation of the Benefits Agency medical services; [1722]

(2) if companies invited to take over the work of the Benefits Agency medical services will be encouraged to take over the adjudication functions of the agency; [766]

(3) what proposals his Department has to contract out the adjudication function of the Benefits Agency medical services. [736]

Mr. Roger Evans: Many adjudicating medical practitioners are already fee-paid doctors working under contract. It is proposed to include the adjudication functions of the Benefits Agency medical services in the scope of work to be contracted out. This will be set out in the statement of service requirements to be issued shortly by the Benefits Agency. Including the medical adjudication function in the contract offers the greatest prospect of increased efficiency, while safeguarding the integrity and standards of decision making and protecting customers' rights. Decisions must continue to be taken as now in accordance with the facts and the law, with rights of appeal to an independent body.

We see no reason in principle to rule out involvement of the private sector in decision making. But we will want to examine this very carefully on a case-by-case basis to ensure that standards of decision making are maintained or improved. We make no presumption about the future extent of private sector involvement.

Independent Living Fund

28. Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will require the independent living fund to make payments which take into account the employer's responsibilities in respect of recipients who employ their own care staff. [1725]

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he proposes to take to ensure that payments from the independent living fund cover employer's liabilities in the same way as direct payments from local authorities under the Community Care (Direct Payments) Act 1996 will do. [2427]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: We have no plans to do so. The trustees of the independent living funds have discretion to make payments towards client's care costs, and they currently help over 15,000 severely disabled people at a cost of £115 million.

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the number of people dependent on means-tested benefits, (a) at present and (b) in 1979. [1712]

Mr. Roger Evans: There were 8.45 million recipients of one or more income-related benefits in May 1995. A direct comparison with 1979 is not possible.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received since announcing the outcome of his review into the system of cold weather payments, with specific reference to the highlands and islands of Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [1716]

Mr. Roger Evans: Since the changes were announced on 14 October, we have received one representation relating to the highlands and islands of Scotland, from the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye.

Benefits (Domestic Pets)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to include an element in social security payments for the upkeep of a domestic pet. [1718]

Mr. Roger Evans: No. Income support does not identify separate amounts for specific expenditure items. Claimants are free to manage their income according to their preferences.

Family Incomes

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the income that an average family in rented accommodation needs to be better off than with nobody in employment receiving (a) the jobseeker's allowance and (b) income support. [2816]

Mr. Roger Evans: People in work on low incomes will usually be entitled to housing and council tax benefits to help ensure work is worthwhile.

A wide range of factors can affect a family's income in and out of work and it is difficult to illustrate the effect of these by using a single typical family as an example. A range of examples is provided in the published tax benefit model tables, April 1996, a copy of which is available in the Library. The April 1996 tables do not cover jobseeker's allowance, but the position will be the same for this purpose as for families receiving income support.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many households received (a) means-tested benefits, (b) income support, (c) family credit, (d) housing benefit and (e) council tax benefit in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1996, in respect of (1) each region in Great Britain and (2) Great Britain as a whole; and what proportion of the total number of households this represented in each case; [3327]

(2) how many households received (i) any means-tested benefit, (ii) income support, (iii) family credit,(iv) housing benefit and (v) council tax benefit in (a) 1992 and (b) 1996 in each standard region of Great Britain and in Great Britain as a whole; and what proportion of the total number of households this represented in each case. [3100]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested. A breakdown of family credit date by Government standard statistical region could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available is in the tables:

1. Numbers have been rounded to the nearest thousand, except figures for one or more means-tested benefit which are rounded to the nearest ten thousand. Due to rounding totals may not tally.
2. Sample sizes: income support/family credit 5 per cent. Housing benefit/council tax benefit 1 per cent.
3. Means-tested benefits are defined as income support, family credit, housing benefit, and community charge benefit/council tax benefit.
4. Household information is not available since benefits are paid to a benefit unit. A benefit unit may be a single person or a couple. There may be more than one benefit unit within a household.
5. Overlaps between benefits have been taken into account in producing the number of benefit units receiving one or more means-tested benefit. There will be a considerable overlap between individual benefit numbers, as a person may receive one or more means-tested benefit.
6. Council tax benefit replaced community charge benefit from April 1993.
7. English regions used for income support, housing benefit, community charge benefit and council tax benefit are Government standard statistical regions. For family credit these are DSS administrative regions.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1996; and if he will make a statement. [3783]

Mr. Heald: The Department has no plans to repeal or amend any rules or regulations by means of reference to the Deregulation Committee by the end of 1996.

Privatisation

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his plans for proceeding with the privatisation of the departmental estate. [4047]

Mr. Lilley: The three shortlisted bidders have today been issued with an invitation to negotiate along with supporting documentation about the Department's property assets and accommodation requirements. The bidders are being asked to make proposals according to the principles of the private finance initiative where the emphasis is on service delivery to specified standards rather than detailed specification of how the services are to be delivered. Overall, the aim of the transfer is to enable the Department to make significant savings in the costs of accommodation services, in part through lower service charges and in part through an immediate return to the taxpayer reflecting the value of these assets. The assets are to be transferred to the successful bidder which will be required to provide a payment of £250 million on completion of the contract to realise immediately an appropriate proportion of their underlying value. The Government also expect that the private sector will be able to provide accommodation services more effectively than if they had remained in-house and will be better able to realise additional development potential. The service charge will therefore reflect this greater efficiency and development potential and the costs to the bidder of raising the capital sum. Specifying a set capital payment will, however, simplify the bidding process for both the bidders and Government and reduce the financial risk to the Government over the lifetime of the contract.

Compensation Reforms

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to ensure that proposals to reform compensation recovery are implemented in the current parliamentary Session. [1613]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 7 November, Official Report, columns 681–82.

Building Societies

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the letter of 14 October from the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People, what external legal advice he has received on potential discrimination caused by (a) payment of bonus shares being made only once to a named building society member and (b) building society requirements that a person with a mental impairment incapable of handling his own affairs is unable to be the first or sole named person on an account. [2748]

Mr. Burt: None. As with all legislation, it is for individual service providers to seek any legal advice they might require on their responsibilities.

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish in the Official Report the letter of 14 October from the Minister of State for Social Security and Disabled People relating to the question of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and building societies. [2749]

Mr. Burt: Yes. The letter reads as follows:

Thank you for your letter of 23 July concerning disabled people and building societies. I apologise for the delay in providing a full reply but, as I explained in my letter of 30th September, these matters are both important and complex. They have, therefore, necessitated investigation with the Treasury, the Building Societies Commission and the Building Societies Association.

The question of the treatment of some disabled customers by building societies first arose earlier in the summer in discussions between my officials and representatives of disability organisations. The NDS has also been taking an interest.

The main problem concerns building society accounts held by disabled people but operated under a power of attorney. In certain circumstances, where the account is held in the name of the attorney, it may be that the disabled person does not receive an allocation of bonus shares on the flotation of a society. This would therefore appear to be less favourable treatment contrary to the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA).

First I should explain that it is not always the case that the person with power of attorney necessarily becomes the member of a building society. An individual may appoint an attorney to deal with his account. However, if the account is held in the name of that individual he or she will remain the member. Alternatively if the account is opened by and held in the name of the attorney then the attorney would be the member and, therefore, be the person entitled to vote and to receive the benefits of membership.

Similarly, a trustee or someone else acting on behalf of a disabled person may be the sole or first named person on the building society account, which would mean that they, rather than the disabled person, would be entitled to privileges of membership including the payment of bonus shares or cash.

It is not discriminatory in itself for payment of bonus shares or cash to be made to someone acting on behalf of a disabled person rather than the disabled person himself. A trustee, attorney or other person first named on an account is under an obligation to account to the beneficial owner of the account for any benefits received. The individual should not suffer financially and is not receiving the service (the perks of membership) on less favourable terms.

Further, the payment of bonus shares or cash to the first named member is a requirement under the Building Societies Act 1986. Therefore the building societies would be acting "in pursuance of an enactment" and would come with section 59 of the DDA. This section provides that if you are required to do something under another law this takes precedence over anything required by the DDA. In any event, the practice in itself is unlikely to be discriminatory for the reasons set out above.

The difficulty comes in the situation that you identify in your letter, where the attorney or other trustee or first named person also has an account in his or her own right and receives a single benefit in respect of both accounts. This is usually the result of a society's decision to make its distribution scheme "member based", that is to say, linked to the entitlement of a member to vote on the transfer proposals (in building societies, as mutual organisations, members have by law only one vote regardless of the amount held in an account or of the number of accounts held). In the case of the Cheltenham & Gloucester, however, the society elected to make its scheme "account based", with each qualifying account, rather than each qualifying member, being entitled to receive a cash payment calculated in accordance with the terms of that scheme, so that a member with a number of different accounts received a payment in respect of each account.

The decisions as to which type of transfer arrangement and scheme to adopt is one for the society—and for its members—to vote on. It is not a statutory requirement in the same way as the payment of bonus shares or cash to the first named member.

The payment of bonus shares being made only once to each named member, however many accounts he may have on his own or others' behalf, may well result in discrimination contrary to the DDA, in that a disabled person may not receive the benefits of membership in the same way as a non-disabled person.

Finally, if it is a building society's requirement that a person with a mental impairment, who is not capable of handling his own affairs, cannot be the first or sole named on the account, it is possible that there is discrimination under the DDA. The disabled person is being offered less favourable terms, for a reason relating to his disability, because he does not have the same choices in the opening of his account. However, this less favourable treatment may be justified under section 20(4)(b) of the DDA. If a building society reasonably believes that a disabled person is incapable of entering into an enforceable agreement, it would seem reasonable to treat that person differently in the opening of his account and require that someone capable deals with these important matters on his behalf. Regulations provide, however, that this subsection does not apply where an attorney is acting on behalf of a disabled person.

As you are aware, the relevant sections of the DDA do not come into force until the 2nd of December. If, after this date, a disabled person can show that they have received less favourable treatment in terms of not receiving the benefits of membership, he or she may be able to argue that they have been unjustifiably discriminated against contrary to the DDA. Ultimately, it will be for the courts to decide whether discrimination has occurred.

I understand that the Building Societies Association has already identified a number of these issues and will shortly be issuing guidance to it members. I will be taking steps to ensure that both the Building Societies Association and the Building Societies Commission are aware of all the potential issues.

Thank you for this opportunity to explain the situation. I apologise again for the delay in replying.

Incapacity and Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people failed to qualify for (a) incapacity benefit and (b) unemployment benefit in (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96 because they failed the contribution conditions for benefit; and in each case, how many of these failed (1) the first contribution condition and (2) the second contribution condition. [2781]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table:

	Number
Claimants who failed the contribution conditions and were refused incapacity benefit from April 1995 to March 1996	[1]389,000
Unemployed claimants as at 11 May 1995 not in receipt of unemployment benefit who failed the contribution conditions	[2]1,127,000
Unemployed claimants as at 9 May 1996 not in receipt of unemployment benefit who failed the contribution conditions.	[2]1,081,000

Source:
[1] Monthly scan of incapacity benefit computer.
[2] Five per cent. sample of unemployed claimants.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the impact of the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 and the Social Security (Invalid Care Allowance) Amendment Regulations 1996; how many people he estimates will (a) gain and (b) suffer financial loss as a result of these regulations; and what are the revenue projections relating to these measures. [2785]

Mr. Roger Evans: There are insufficient data on which to base reliable estimates. However, we anticipate that the numbers of gainers and losers will be small. The revenue implications of the regulations are expected to be broadly cost neutral.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of (a) the cost and (b) the numbers gaining from raising the lower capital threshold from £3,000 to £8,000 for disability working allowance claims. [2784]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The estimated cost of raising the lower capital limit for disability working allowance from £3,000 to £18,000 is approximately £1 million at 1996–97 prices and benefit levels, for around 1,000 cases.

Notes

1. The 1994–95 family resources survey has been used to estimate the effect of this proposal. However the data do not contain a sufficient number of DWA cases to allow the direct modelling of DWA options on the policy simulation model. Instead, the changes have been modelled using all childless benefit units as a proxy for DWA cases without children, and all family credit benefit units as a proxy for DWA cases with children.

2. The use of proxy groups means that these estimates are subject to relatively wide margins of error. Estimates will only be accurate to the extent that the proxy groups have the same characteristics as DWA cases, which is unlikely to hold in reality. Estimates should be treated with caution.

3. Estimated expenditure is rounded to the nearest £1 million, with caseloads to the nearest 1,000.

4. The figures should be treated only as broad estimates and not as actual.

Derelict Property, Romford Road

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans his Department has for the future use of the derelict property it formerly occupied at 544 Romford road, London E12. [3280]

Mr. Roger Evans: None, as the Department's lease on the property expired in 1991.

Pension Liabilities

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when, and in what form, he proposes to reply to the first report of the Social Security Select Committee, HC23, Session 1996–97, on unfunded pension liabilities in the EU. [3529]

Mr. Lilley: We propose to respond in the usual way within the normal period of three months of the original publication date.

Benefits Agency (Emergency Payments)

Mr. Redmond: To asked the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the work load of the out-of-hours emergency payments service of the Benefits Agency area directorate covering (a) the Yorkshire and Humberside area (b) Doncaster and (c) Mexborough for the financial years (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97 to date. [2718]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 11 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will make a statement about the workload of the out of hours emergency payments service of the Benefits Agency Area Directorate covering (a) the Yorkshire and Humberside Area (b) Doncaster and (c) Mexborough for financial years (i) 1995–96 and (ii) 1996–97 to date.

Information is not available in the format requested. Statistics are collated at Area Directorate level and not by office. From April 1996, the two area Directorates of "South Yorkshire and Humberside" (which included Doncaster and Mexborough) and "North and West Yorkshire" merged to form Yorkshire Area Directorate (AD).

I have provided the number of referrals to the Out of Hours Service (OOHS) for the year April 1995 to March 1996 and the latest collated figures for Yorkshire AD for the period 1 April 1996 and 13 October 1996.

It should be noted that a referral means any contact by a customer or third party. Approximately 50% of the referrals require a visit by Benefits Agency staff.

Referrals to OOHS

South Yorkshire and Humberside	1,878
North and West Yorkshire	2,533
1 April 1996 to 13 October 1996
Yorkshire	2,183

These figures are provisional and subject to change. I hope you find this reply helpful.

Peter Sutton

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if all the benefit claimants affected by computer error referred to in his Department's response of 12 August to correspondence on behalf of Peter Sutton have been contacted and, where applicable, reimbursed and compensated for the error; and what was the total value of both (a) arrears of benefit and (b) compensation paid. [3107]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 11 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if all the benefit claimants affected by computer error referred to in his Department's response of 12th August to correspondence on behalf of Peter Sutton have been contacted and, where applicable, reimbursed and compensated for the error; and what was the total value of both arrears of benefit and compensation paid.

The exercise to contact the 12,325 benefit customers affected by the computer fault is continuing. I can confirm that 2088 awards have been revised from the statistics received so far from Benefit Agency Offices. The information requested is not available as the statistics relate specifically to the number of cases where all action has been completed and not to the number of customers contacted. Full details of the current information received are in the following table:

	Total number of cases identified	Number revised	Amount underpaid £000	Number of compensation claims	Number of compensation claims so far awarded	Amount of compensation paid £000
Retirement pension and widows' benefit	6,742	1,392	821	1,039	336	24
Invalidity benefit	5,583	696	133	156	41	2.7

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

Compensation will be payable in any case where the benefit arrears amount to over £50, the amount of compensation exceeds £5 and the delay in payment is more than eight months (retirement pension) or seven months (widows' benefit and invalidity benefit) from the date of entitlement to the revised rate of benefit.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Benefits Agency (Public Caller Offices)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency public caller offices are scheduled to (a) close and (b) have their opening hours reduced in order to reduce administrative costs in the three years to March 1999. [2118]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Gordon Prentice, dated 11 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent parliamentary Question asking the Secretary of State how many Benefits Agency (BA) public caller offices are scheduled to (a) close and (b) have their opening hours reduced in order to reduce administrative costs in the three years to March 1999.

In the period April to October 1996 16 BA public caller offices were closed and 2 had their opening hours reduced. From November 1996 to March 1999, 17 BA public caller offices are currently scheduled to close and 3 are currently scheduled to have their opening hours reduced.

Consultation with customers and customers' representatives always takes place before the closure of any BA public caller office.

We are directing our resources to where they are needed most, and BA District Managers, using their local knowledge, will continue to review, on an on-going basis, the service they provide to maximise service to the public and provide value for money to the tax payer. Since the advent of Job Seekers' Allowance, unemployed customers also have access to enquiry facilities sited in over 1000 Employment Services Job Centres.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

WALES

BSE (Compensation)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage and total amount of BSE eradication and compensation scheme expenditure has been received by (a) farmers, (b) slaughterers, (c) renderers and (d) other recipients; and if he will make a statement. [2162]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 6 November 1996]: Between April and the end of October 1996, the total UK expenditure on BSE eradication and compensation schemes broken down by recipients was as follows:

	£ million	Per cent.
(a) Farmers	477	68
(b) Slaughterers	97	14
(c) Renderers	78	11
(d) Other recipients	48	7
	700

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the total expenditure to date on the BSE eradication and compensation schemes; and if he will make a statement. [2166]

Mr. Hague [holding answer 6 November 1996]: The total UK expenditure to date is £700 million. Most of this expenditure has been on the over-30-month slaughter scheme, the calf processing scheme, the additional EU compensation package—beef special premium scheme and suckler cow premuim scheme top-up,beef marketing payment scheme—the beef stocks transfer scheme, the animal feed recall scheme, aid to renderers, emergency aid to the slaughtering sector.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the methods by which compensation has been directed to farmers in Wales since the onset of the BSE crisis, (b) the level of expenditure in Wales under each of these headings and (c) the amount of each expenditure item in Wales that is recoverable from the European Union. [3393]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 24 July 1996, Official Report, columns 532–33. Subsequent to that reply, additional expenditure has been agreed as follows:

> Approximately £160 million from EU funds for direct support to UK beef producers. Over £100 million—of this, £10.46 million in Wales—has already been disbursed through supplementary payments to the beef special premium and suckler cow premium schemes and through the beef marketing payments scheme.
> Some £89 million from national funds for direct support to UK beef producers. £60 million of this sum has been earmarked for distribution to eligible cattle producers under the 1997 hill livestock compensatory allowance scheme.
> £16.6 million for extra cold storage capacity to help reduce the backlog of animals awaiting slaughter under the over-30-month scheme.

Disaggregated levels of expenditure for Wales are not held by the Intervention Board executive agency which is responsible for running the majority of BSE-related schemes in the UK. A detailed breakdown of the latest BSE expenditure forecasts will be given in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's forthcoming Budget statement.

GP Fundholding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for fundholding status he is considering from general practitioners in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [2267]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Applications from 25 practices have been accepted and they are now preparing to start fundholding from next April.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the population within each health district are presently covered by general practitioner fundholding practices. [3187]

Mr. Jones: The latest available figures are given in the following table.

Health authority area	Percentage of people registered with a doctor who are covered by a fundholding practice
Bro Taf	42
Dyfed Powys	73
Gwent	50
Morgannwg	56
North Wales	44
Wales	52

Methicillin Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many cases of MRSA have been recorded in the Royal Gwent hospital in each of the last five years broken down by age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement; [2899]

(2) how many (a) cases and (b) deaths from MRSA have been recorded in Wales in each of the last five years broken down in each case by age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2888]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There were two, two and 53 cases of MRSA recorded by the Royal Gwent laboratory in 1994, 1995 and 1996—up to 22 July—respectively. No breakdown of these data by age band is available centrally. Information relating to Wales is given in the following table.

Laboratory confirmed cases of MRSA in Wales

Age group	1994	1995	1996[1]
Under 1	2	3	8
1 to 4	1	3	7
5 to 14	—	3	10
15 to 24	16	13	51
25 to 34	17	24	88
35 to 44	21	17	85
45 to 54	23	29	99
55 to 64	26	33	157

CDSC Welsh unit MRSA surveillance programme in Wales.
Notes:
Completeness of reporting by laboratories is variable. Increased emphasis was placed on reporting in 1996 and additional features requested. Data may include some GP referrals. The numbers indicated are patients identified with MRSA, only a proportion of these will have clinical illness—estimated at 50 per cent.—due to MRSA infection, the remainders will be carriers of the organism.
[1] To 4 November.

Figures for the number of deaths are not currently available. Work being undertaken by the Office for National Statistics may provide some data in due course.

Prescribed Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the average (a) number of types and (b) quantity of preparations taken by people in Wales in each of the last five years broken down by (a) gender and (b) age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2884]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No estimate has been made.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many submissions he has received (a) in favour and (b) opposed to nursery school vouchers in the last two years. [3224]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Government's intention of increasing provision for four-year-olds has been welcomed. Submissions in favour of a voucher scheme as a means of giving effect to those proposals have not been solicited, although there has been one specific letter of support. In addition to ministerial correspondence, the Welsh Office has received some 4,500 letters and almost 60 petitions in opposition to the scheme. The large amount of correspondence against the scheme is not surprising as it is clear from the letters that there have been many misunderstandings and much misinformation.

Crown Estate

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of the land in Wales is owned by the Crown Estate; and what environmental regulations apply to this land. [3283]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Crown Estate in Wales extends to 67,466 acres, of which 63,509 acres are subject to commoners rights.

Environmental regulations covering this land will depend upon its designation.

Secondees and Consultants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) secondees and (b) consultants are working for his Department on (i) private finance initiative and (ii) other issues; and at what cost to public funds in (1) the current financial year and (2) 1997–98. [3673]

Mr. Hague: Thirteen people are currently on secondment to my Department, at a total cost in 1996–97 of £351,500. One is working on the private finance initiative. My Department plans to spend around £880,000 on external consultants in 1996–97, including £130,000 on PFI-related work. Plans for expenditure on inward secondments and external consultancy in 1997–98 have not yet been decided.

Gwent Health Authority

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Gwent health authority concerning a recent dispute relating to the appointment of a senior manager; [3674]

(2) what requests he has received from the chairman of the Gwent health authority for approval of an ex gratia severance payment to a senior manager appointed in January 1996; and if he will make a statement. [3675]

Mr. Hague: I wrote to the chairman after I received a copy of the report of the inquiry into the appointment. No proposal to make a severance payment has been received.

University Hospital of Wales

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what secondment he has given to the former chief nurse of the university hospital of Wales; and if he will make a statement on the financial arrangements. [3676]

Mr. Hague: The former chief nurse is working on a collaborative project managed by the trust, college of medicine and my Department on the developing role of the clinical nurse. It fulfils part of the remit of the task force on continuing education and practice chaired by the chief nursing officer. Costs are shared by the participants, with the trust paying for her salary until 31 May 1997.

South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 295, if he will arrange for a copy of the district auditor's report into the accounts of the South and East Wales Ambulance NHS trust to be placed in the Library. [3671]

Mr. Hague: Yes. A copy is now available in the Library of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Research and Development Programme

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the European Commission concerning integration of applied research funded under the fifth framework programme and national research initiatives. [3167]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The UK set out its view on the relationship of EU and nationally funded research programmes in its position paper on the fifth framework programme for research and technological development, submitted to the European Commission in June 1996. This is available on the Internet at http://www.open.gov.uk/ost/osthome.html.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the European Commission as regards the priority accorded to basic research in the fifth framework programme. [3165]

Mr. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The UK set out its view on the place of basic research in the EU's fifth framework programme for research and technological development in its position paper submitted to the European Commission in June 1996. This can be found on the Internet at http://www.open.gov.uk/ost/osthome.html.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the EU on the levels of funding available for social sciences and humanities under the fifth framework programme. [3166]

Mr. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

None. At this early stage in the negotiations for the EU's fifth framework programme for research and technological development, it is premature to make representations on levels of funding for specific parts of the programme.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken to ensure that the quality of research funded by the fifth framework programme is of a similar standard to that funded in the United Kingdom. [3164]

Mr. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The UK attaches great importance to research funded by the EU's framework programmes for research and technological development being of the highest quality. In the negotiations on the EU's fifth framework programme the UK will press for scientific excellence to remain the primary criterion for selecting projects for support.

Mrs. Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the Government are taking in respect of the indirect costs of European research programmes to enable universities to participate actively in the fifth framework programme. [3168]

Mr. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

None. It is for individual institutions to decide whether to bid for EU framework programme funds on the basis of the EU's conditions of funding.

Anglo-French Summit

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had on the furtherance of nuclear co-operation with France at the Anglo-French summit in Bordeaux. [3618]

Mr. David Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, together with our French counterparts, reviewed the work of the Franco-British Joint Nuclear Commission.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary for State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the United States Government before the Anglo-French summit on the matters to be discussed there. [3565]

Mr. Davis: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary had no specific discussions with the United States Government prior to the UK-French summit on matters to be discussed there.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the members of his Department who attended the Anglo-French summit in Bordeaux and (b) the positions they hold. [3619]

Mr. Davis: The following members of this Department accompanied me to the UK French summit in Bordeaux:

London delegation

Mr. W. G. Ehrman: principle private secretary

Mr. J. Macadie: Private secretary, Minister of State

Ms E. R. Rea: Personal assistant

Mr. P. Lever: Director for EU and economic affairs and deputy under-secretary of state

Mr. J. Greenstock: Political director and deputy under-secretary of state

Mr. N. Sheinwald: Head of news department

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which representatives of the United States Government attended the Anglo-French summit as observers. [3564]

Mr. Davis: No representatives of the United States Government attended the UK-French summit as observers.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place copies of all agreements reached between Britain and

France and all communiqués issued during the Anglo–French summit in Bordeaux in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [3603]

Mr. Davis: One joint agreement was signed at the summit, a UK–French naval letter of intent; and one joint statement was issued, on Zaire. A copy of each will be deposited in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had on the memorandum of agreement on co–operation concerning nuclear safety and security which the United States of America signed with France on 4 June at the Anglo–French summit in Bordeaux [3617]

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

We have had no such discussions.

China

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government regarding the detention of Mr. Ngawang Choephel; and if he will make a statement. [3659]

Mr. Hanley: A great many cases, such as those of Ngawang Choephel, are brought to our attention. We continue to be concerned about such cases, and regularly express our views about the human rights situation in Tibet to the Chinese authorities. I did so most recently when I met the Chinese Vice Premier Li Lanqing in London on 5 November.

Pakistan

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the advice given by his Department to the Home Office about political freedom in Pakistan following the recent decision by the President of that country to dismiss the Government. [3559]

Dr. Liam Fox: We are continuing to monitor closely the situation in Pakistan in conjunction with the Home Office. It is important that the elections called for 3 February are free and fair.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the report of the United Nations special rapporteur on human rights in Pakistan; and if he will list the steps taken by his Government to ensure that the special rapporteur's recommendations are implemented. [3560]

Dr. Fox: The Special Rapporteur on Torture has reported instances of serious human rights abuses in Pakistan. We expect such allegations to be fully investigated. We have regularly raised human rights issues with Pakistan, most recently when I met the Human Rights Minister in Islamabad in October, and will continue to do so.

Chernobyl

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have made to the findings of the Secretary-General's report to the General Assembly of the United Nations in September 1995, regarding the health, social and economic conditions of areas in Belarus, Ukraine, and the southern Russian Federation which were worst affected by the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement. [3696]

Dr. Liam Fox: The Secretary-General's report on the Chernobyl accident, presented to the General Assembly of the United Nations in September 1995, was studied with great interest by those UK Government Departments and agencies concerned. It was a valuable contribution to international understanding of the problems arising from the accident. The main emphasis of the UK's aid policy in relation to the affected areas of Belarus, Ukraine and in Russia has been to deliver assistance through international agencies, such as the International Atomic Energy Agency, the World Health Organisation and the European Union. We believe such agencies are best placed to co-ordinate and prioritise the work that needs to be done.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what initiatives Her Majesty's Government (a) have taken and (b) plan to take in 1996 to provide bilateral aid to the Governments of Ukraine and Belarus for the purposes of alleviating the social, health, economic and environmental effects of the Chernobyl disaster; and if he will make a statement. [3697]

Dr. Fox: Since 1986, UK bilateral assistance has included £6.1 million from the UK's know-how fund for energy sector reform measures in Ukraine, and we have funded land remediation feasibility studies in the region via the environmental know-how fund. But most of the UK's assistance is channelled through joint programmes managed with our G7 and EU partners. So far, we have contributed £18.25 million to the international nuclear safety account, of which £10 million has been earmarked for Chernobyl-related projects. The Department of Health is supporting international activities to deal with health effects from Chernobyl and is directly supporting research on the incidence of childhood thyroid cancer. This year we have supported work on radioactive food screening and soil decontamination.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the Government have made to the United Nations trust fund for the relief of Chernobyl victims. [3698]

Dr. Fox: Her Majesty's Government have contributed £25,000 to the United Nations trust fund for the relief of Chernobyl victims.

ENVIRONMENT

Renewable Energy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans his Department has to revise planning policy guidance note No. 22 on renewable energy to give greater encouragement to autonomous local services and associated industries; and if he will make a statement. [3435]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government have no immediate plans to revise planning policy guidance note No. 22, "Renewable Energy".

Regeneration Assistance

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assistance his Department provides to (a) the Prince's Trust and (b) Business in the Community. [3431]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department assists these organisations in a number of ways and greatly values the contribution that they make to strengthen communities and promoting regeneration. We are currently assisting the Prince's Trust through the free secondment of two members of staff, one to the headquarters office of the Prince's Trust volunteers and another to the Prince of Wales business leaders forum. We liaise with Business in the Community on various matters of common interest and provide grants towards some of its regeneration and environmental work, the total for the current financial year being about £120,000. My Department worked in partnership with Business in the Community and others to set up the local investment fund, which has already provided over £½ million in loans for voluntary sector projects in deprived areas.

Preston Farm, Stockton on Tees

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are employed on Teesside development corporation's Preston Farm site in Stockton on Tees. [3880]

Sir Paul Beresford: It is estimated that 3,400 people now work on the Preston Farm site.

Green Ministers

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when was the last meeting of the green Ministers; who attended; and what issues were discussed. [3867]

Mr. Clappison: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's news release No. 480, issued earlier today.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Pension Scheme

Mr. Denham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many requests for information the principal civil service pension scheme has received from pension providers undertaking reviews of pension transfers and opt-outs; in how many cases all appropriate information has been supplied; what is the average length of time taken to supply such information; and what moratorium has been introduced on supplying such information. [3340]

Mr. Freeman: The administration of the principal civil service pension scheme is carried out by employing Departments and the information requested is not held centrally. Administrators have been provided with information packs on the PCSPS, and use these, together with a standard questionnaire on members' benefits, to help them handle requests from pension providers consistently and efficiently. The recent introduction of powers to recharge administrative costs should assist further with the processing of such requests although we believe that relatively few civil servants are affected by the personal pensions review.

Central Intelligence Machinery

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to revise the booklet published in 1993 on the Cabinet Office's central intelligence machinery. [4256]

Mr. Freeman: A revised edition of the booklet is to be published today and copies are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses. It is being launched simultaneously on the Internet.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Zaire and Rwanda

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the British Government (a) are taking and (b) plan to take, within the EU and with their UN partners, (i) to support the ceasefire in eastern Zaire, (ii) to ensure that humanitarian aid reaches the refugee population in eastern Zaire and (iii) to promote a regional solution to the problems of the Great Lakes region. [3678]

Dr. Liam Fox: UN Security Council resolution 1078 of 9 November calls for an immediate ceasefire and complete cessation of all hostilities in the region. We continue to urge all parties to observe a ceasefire, which will be vital for humanitarian aid to reach those in need. We are in close touch with UN agencies and non-governmental organisations, many of them British, which have undertaken missions into eastern Zaire to assess humanitarian needs and means of delivery. We stand ready to provide further assistance. An EU ministerial troika is also in the region to assess what contribution the EU can make. We strongly support the efforts of the EU and UN special envoys to promote a regional solution to the problems facing the Great Lakes, and welcome the constructive engagement of regional leaders in that process.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the British Government have made to proposals to send a multinational force to Zaire; and what logistical and financial support the Government have offered in respect of such a force. [3679]

Dr. Fox: We supported United Nations Security Council resolution 1078 authorising member states to begin preparations for a multinational force and are working closely with our partners in considering the options for a possible UK contribution.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the British Government are taking to promote the holding of a regional conference on the political problems of the Great Lakes region. [3677]

Dr. Fox: We fully support the convening, under UN and Organisation of African Unity auspices, of an international conference on peace, security and development in the Great Lakes region. We are working to promote the support of countries within the region, as well as of the wider international community, for urgent action to make all the necessary arrangements for such a conference.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the recent declaration of a ceasefire by the Tutsi rebels in eastern Zaire; and if he will make a statement. [3680]

Dr. Fox: We welcome the declaration of a ceasefire on 5 November by Banyamulenge leaders. We continue to urge all parties to the conflict in eastern Zaire to declare a complete cessation of violence.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the current total of unclaimed prizes from the national lottery; how much interest has been earned by this sum; and where each sum is retained and by whom. [3279]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have, therefore, asked the Director General of the Office of the National Lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the right hon. Member, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

DEFENCE

Environmental Assessment

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what environmental assessment in respect of contaminated land has been conducted at (a) the chemical defence establishment at Nancekuke in Cornwall, (b) the central dockyard laboratory at HM naval base, Portsmouth and (c) the RAF aeroplane and armaments experimental establishment at Boscombe Down; [3526]

(2) what environmental impact assessment has been conducted in respect of contaminated land at (a) the Admiralty engineering laboratories at (i) Ditton Park and (ii) West Drayton (b) the Admiralty experimental works at Haslar, Gosport, (c) the Admiralty marine engineering establishment at Portland, (d) the Admiralty materials laboratory at Holton Heath, Poole, (e) the Admiralty research laboratories at (i) Perran Porth, Cornwall, (ii) Teddington and (iii) Bushy Park, (f) the Admiralty surface weapons establishments at (i) Ditton Park, (ii) Eastney Portsmouth, (iii) Funtingdon, (iv) London road, Portsmouth, and (v) Portsmouth, Cosham and (g) the Admiralty underwater weapons establishments. [3413]

Mr. Soames: My Department has carried out environmental assessments as appropriate at its sites. As I informed the hon. Member on 15 October, Official Report, column 861, we are introducing a prioritised procedure of land quality assessment for the defence estate, which will provide a publicly available land quality statement for individual sites. However, such documents do not yet exist in respect of these sites, and historic details are not held centrally on work carried out in the past.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ask his United States counterpart to provide routinely to his Department copies of the environmental compliance assessment and management programme reports for each military facility in the United Kingdom and overseas territories where operating rights have been granted to United States defence forces. [3414]

Mr. Soames: MOD personnel are already fully involved in the environmental audit process at US military facilities in the UK and are routinely made aware of the contents of environmental compliance assessment and management programme reports. Similarly FCO personnel are kept fully informed of the environmental impact of all US activities at overseas territories where operating rights have been granted to US forces.

Nuclear Co-operation (France)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions were held on co-ordinating the patrols of Trident and the French Triomphant submarines at the Anglo-French summit in Bordeaux. [3616]

Mr. Soames: No such discussions were held.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the number of occasions in the last four years that members of the French armed forces have visited the United Kingdom to discuss the furtherance of nuclear co-operation. [3604]

Mr. Soames: Members of the French armed forces regularly visit the United Kingdom to discuss matters related to defence nuclear co-operation.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the number of occasions in the last four years that representatives or contractors of the Delegation Generale pour l'Armement, and the Commissariat a l'Energie Atomique have visited the atomic weapons establishments at Aldermaston, Burghfield, Cardiff and Foulness; [3606]

(2) if he will list the number of occasions in the last four years that representatives or contractors of the Delegation Generale pour l'Armement, and the Commissariat a l'Energie Atomique have visited the United Kingdom to discuss the furtherance of nuclear co-operation. [3605]

Mr. Soames: There have been 28 visits by representatives or contractors of the DGA and CEA to UK atomic weapon establishments in the period. There have also been four visits by French officials to the UK for discussions on nuclear technical and scientific matters.

Armed Forces (Beef)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 195, for what reasons British frozen beef is not readily available for use by the armed forces. [3821]

Mr. Arbuthnot: For commercial reasons the British market deals predominantly in fresh beef.

SCOTLAND

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the purpose of the visit by the Under-Secretary of State, the Earl of Lindsay, to Middleshot square, Prestonpans, on 6 November. [3411]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 November 1996]: My noble Friend visited Prestonpans on 6 November to see at first hand the damage to the homes in Middleshot square and the efforts of the local authority and emergency services in dealing with the situation. He also took the opportunity to visit Preston Lodge school, where the local authority had provided rest centre facilities for the families who had been evacuated from their homes.

Earth Tremors (Musselburgh)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many earth tremors have been recorded in the Musselburgh area in recent weeks; what was the magnitude of the tremors; and if he will make a statement on possible connections with current and historic coal mining operations in the neighbourhood. [3086]

Mr. Kynoch: The British Geological Survey reported on 6 November that 79 tremors have been detected in the Musselburgh area; 19 of which have been recorded as being felt by residents. The tremors have been of varying magnitude; the largest, with a magnitude of 2 on the Richter scale, was recorded on 25 October. Precise records of old workings in the area do not exist. It is difficult therefore to determine precisely the relationship between the tremors and previous and current mining operations. However, in the 25 years of the British Geological Survey's seismic monitoring programme, there have been no reports of structural damage or injuries caused by mining-induced earthquakes.

Research and Development

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those companies which have established plants in Scotland in each of the past 10 years which have created research and development centres within those plants. [3210]

Mr. Kynoch: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Child Witnesses

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many cases at (a) the High Court and (b) the sheriff court have been abandoned because of the inability of child witnesses to give evidence in each of the past four years; and if he will make a statement; [3211]

(2) in respect of how many cases at (a) the High Court and (b) the sheriff court closed circuit television has been employed in the examination of child witnesses in each of the past four years; [3212]

(3) if he will list the courts which (a) currently have closed circuit television and (b) are to have such equipment installed within the next two years; and if he will make a statement. [3213]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics regarding the abandonment of such cases are not available, but indications are that the numbers are not substantial. A range of measures contribute to this. To assist those children whom it is anticipated may have difficulty giving evidence in a conventional court setting, applications may be made before the trial for the use of screens, closed circuit television or evidence on commission. Since 1 April 1996, prior statements of witnesses, including children, may be admissible in terms of the new exceptions to the hearsay rule contained in sections 259 to 262 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. There have been a number of instances where prosecutors have had recourse to these provisions, which allow for the introduction of prior statements by a child, providing at the time a statement was made, the child would have been a competent witness.

CCTV has been employed in the examination of child witnesses on the following occasions:

Year	Sheriff Court cases	High Court cases
1993	2	5
1994	6	5
1996 (to 30 September)	0	6

CCTV equipment is available in the High Court in Edinburgh and in each sheriffdom. It can be made available for all High Court sittings at which it is required. For the sheriff courts, equipment is based at Edinburgh, Glasgow, Greenock, Aberdeen, Airdrie and Falkirk sheriff courts. Installation of CCTV equipment is included in the plans for the refurbishment of the High Court buildings in Edinburgh and Glasgow.

Extra-contractual Referrals

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to simplify the procedure for extra-contractual referrals; and when he plans to implement them. [3518]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Measures to simplify the procedures for extra-contractual referrals were introduced on 1 October 1996. From that date, it is no longer necessary for NHS trusts to notify purchasers in advance of emergency and tertiary extra-contractual referrals, unless a patient's stay is expected to exceed 28 days or where the costs are likely to be in excess of £6,000. Similar procedures have been introduced in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. We will consult the health service in Scotland about any future proposals further to simplify the procedure for extra-contractual referrals.

TREASURY

Cross-channel Shopping

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of (a) excise and (b) VAT revenue during the last 12 months due to consumers crossing the English channel to avoid United Kingdom taxation on (i) alcohol, (ii) cigarettes and tobacco and (iii) perfumes; what is the equivalent figure for the previous 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [2787]

Mr. Oppenheim: Customs' latest estimate of excise duty and VAT revenues lost from legitimate personal importation of duty-paid alcohol and tobacco products is for the calendar year 1995, and is given in the table. Equivalent figures for calendar year 1994 are given in brackets.

Revenue losses from cross-border shopping

£ million

Product type	Excise duty	VAT	Total revenue
Alcohol products	145 (145)	65 (60)	210 (205)
Tobacco products	65 (55)	15 (15)	80 (70)
Total	210 (200)	80 (75)	290 (275)

Figures have been independently rounded to £5 million. Figures assume that 50 per cent. of alcohol purchased is additional consumption.

Customs' estimate of revenue evasion through smuggling of alcohol and tobacco products, excluding any losses from commercial fraud, is set out in the table. The actual loss to the Exchequer will be less than the amount of revenue evaded, as some smuggling is likely to represent additional consumption, rather than substituting for similar goods bought in the UK. There was no previous official estimate of revenue evaded through smuggling.

Revenue evaded through smuggling

£ million

Product type	Excise duty	VAT	Total revenue
Alcohol products	145	65	210
Tobacco products	445	115	560
Total	590	180	770

Figures have been independently rounded to £5 million.

There is no official estimate of revenue losses from cross-border shopping in perfumes.

Opticians (VAT)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost of repayments of VAT to opticians; what rebates remained unpaid after the cut off date; what representations he has received on this matter; and what action he proposes to take as a result. [3035]

Mr. Oppenheim: VAT refunds totalling about £200 million have been made to opticians. Customs and Excise does not have information on how many opticians had not made claims by 18 July, and does not hold figures centrally of those who have not received a full refund. Following the Government's announcement on 18 July, and the subsequent exposure of the related draft Finance Bill clauses, a number of representations on various aspects of the proposed changes have been received. They are being considered along with all other representations.

NHS Trusts (VAT)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with (a) the Secretary of State for Health and (b) NHS trusts regarding the three year limit for refund claims for VAT payments by NHS trusts; and if he will make a statement. [3240]

Mr. Oppenheim: None. Where trusts incur VAT on contracted-out services relating to their non-business activities, they should not normally need to make retrospective claims for VAT. Under the special arrangements for contracted out services, refunds can be claimed on a current, monthly basis and there is some flexibility at the end of each financial year.

Personal Pensions

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the reviews of personal pensions cases referred to in the guidelines issued by the Securities and Investments Board in 1994. [4278]

Mrs. Angela Knight: SIB's guidance to regulators recognised under the Financial Services Act 1986 called for a substantial programme of case reviews to establish whether people who had transferred out of occupational schemes, or opted out of them, or had never joined them, in order to hold a personal pension had done so as a result of mis-selling. Where mis-selling was found to lead to financial loss for investors, SIB has looked to the investment firms responsible to provide redress either by reinstating the investor into the occupational scheme—where this was possible—or by topping up the investor's personal pension.

This review process has proved extraordinarily difficult for all concerned. It has required regulators and investment firms to devote substantial resources to the casework. There have been a number of reasons why progress has been slower than the regulators had expected, some of them arising from factors beyond the control of the firms responsible for carrying out case reviews. However, regrettably there are some investment firms which have made less effort than others to carry out the required casework.

Even when the firms concerned are anxious to bring cases to a speedy conclusion, it has often proved difficult to do so because of the volume and complexity of the information required to evaluate each case in full. For whatever reason they arise, delays are a matter of concern.

In order to speed up progress with reviews, SIB has today issued a statement setting out a streamlined approach to evaluation of scheme benefits for computation of loss or redress. It involves using a simplified model which is designed both to reduce significantly the burden on occupational schemes and to enable firms to reach reliable conclusions by using information which is generally available about the terms of the relevant occupational scheme(s) together with standard or approximate data for missing items. By using this approach, it should be possible for investment firms to conclude case reviews more quickly and thus put matters right for investors more quickly too. Where standard or approximate data are used for important items, investors will be informed and have the opportunity to provide detailed data.

The Government welcome this initiative. SIB's model should provide robust results with less administrative input. It means investors who might otherwise have been members of occupational schemes should get their cases sorted out more quickly while investment firms should need to divert resources into this important task for a shorter period. It will also require less input from occupational schemes, which can experience difficulties in providing non-pension information about former members.

The pensions industry must make haste to complete their case reviews, in the interests not only of the financial position of the investors concerned but of restoring the industry's reputation. I also trust that occupational schemes will co-operate in providing information to investment firms and in providing reinstatement for current employees.

For the public service pension schemes, the basic information required is already fully available. Steps have also been taken to ensure that these schemes stand ready to reinstate current employees into the relevant schemes for both future and past service.

At this state, it is not clear how fast cases can now be progressed. Investment firms have much relevant information already and may be able to complete these cases quickly now. SIB now expects the front-line regulators to assess what can be achieved by their members using the new guidance, and then to set and monitor realistic but appropriately challenging targets for completing the review process.

Investment firms have a clear responsibility to give priority to this important task. Their good names and the prospects of the industry depend upon it. I therefore welcome SIB's warning that firms failing to carry out their responsibilities must expect disciplinary action from their regulators. I very much hope that further disciplinary action will not be necessary and that the pensions industry will now move swiftly to put this unfortunate episode behind it.

Earnings

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will show the number and proportion of manual, non-manual, and all part-time employees on adult rates earning less than (a) £4.42, (b) £5.89 and (c) £6.31 per hour excluding overtime payments for (i) women, (ii) men and (iii) both sexes by standard economic region for Great Britain as a whole and for (1) each county and unitary authority in England, (2) each unitary authority in Wales, (3) each London borough and Greater London as a whole, (4) each unitary authority in Scotland, (5) Great Britain as a whole and (6) England as a whole for April 1996; [518]

(2) if he will show the number of and proportion of manual, non-manual and all full-time employees on adult rates earning less than (a) £167.45, (b) £223.27 and (c) £239.16 per week excluding overtime payments for (i) women, (ii) men and (iii) both sexes by standard economic region for Great Britain as a whole and for (1) each county and unitary authority in England, (2) each unitary authority in Wales, (3) each London borough and Greater London as a whole, (4) each unitary authority in Scotland, (5) Great Britain as a whole and (6) England as a whole for April 1996. [517]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answers 30 October 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. P. G. Pepper to Mr Peter Hain dated 13 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Director of the Office for National Statistics to reply to your recent questions asking for various figures on the number of and proportion of manual, non-manual part-time and full-time employees on adult rates of pay per hour and per week.

The director has asked me to respond in his absence.

The latest information from the New Earnings Survey, April 1996, is contained in the enclosed tables. I will also arrange for a copy of this letter and the tables to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Taxpayer Records

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchquer (1) how security clearance is obtained for all personnel handling classified information at Oracle facilities abroad; [1076]

(2) if he will specify the arrangements made for the prosecution of offences under section 182 of the Finance Act 1989 by persons working at Oracle facilities abroad; [1078]

(3) if he will publish the undertaking which persons working at Oracle facilities abroad are required to sign in relation to taxpayer information; what are the terms of the oral declaration which persons working at Oracle facilities abroad are required to make and what are the circumstances in which it is required to be given, and the person to whom it is to be given; what are the arrangements made for ensuring compliance with these obligations at Oracle facilities abroad; and if he will specify the actions that would be taken against a person working at an Oracle facility abroad for breach of such obligations, or any other confidentiality obligation imposed by UK law; [1075]

(4) how Oracle ensures that persons at Oracle facilities abroad are made aware of their obligations under section 182 of the Finance Act 1989. [1077]

(5) if he will specify such other arrangements as may be made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in carrying out their functions of care and management under section 1 of the Taxes and Management Act 1970 in respect of access to copies of batches of taxpayer records at Oracle facilities abroad. [1080]

Mr. Jack [holding answers 30 October 1996]: The Inland Revenue's contract with Electronic Data Service Ltd. and EDS's contract with Oracle have both been amended to enable specialist staff at Oracle facilities abroad, in exceptional circumstances, to have access to copies of subsets of taxpayer records in order to carry out either diagnostic and/or remedial work necessary to support the self-assessment computer system. These amendments ensure that such access is permitted only under the very strict security arrangements specified by the Inland Revenue and that Oracle is fully accountable, through EDS, to the Inland Revenue if there are any breaches of confidentiality. All Oracle employees are required to sign an agreement which, among other provisions, commits them to protect any information belonging to the Inland Revenue. If these procedures were to be breached, the agreement provides for a range of sanctions, including summary dismissal. The sanctions and remedies afforded by the criminal or civil laws of the United States and Australia may also flow from any such breaches.

Inheritance Tax Exemption

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent local authorities are consulted prior to agreements being made to grant conditional exemption from inheritance tax on condition that reasonable public access is allowed over the site; if local authorities are required to consult interested parties over the proposals; and what restrictions are imposed upon local authorities preventing them from disclosing information on the proposals. [1626]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 November 1996]: In considering claims for conditional exemption for land, the Inland Revenue seeks advice from the Government's heritage advisory agencies—for example, the Countryside Commission for scenic land in England. As well as considering the eligibility of the land, the advisory agencies discuss and negotiate with owners the steps needed to meet the undertakings required by the law about the maintenance and preservation of the land, and securing public access to it. As part of this process, the agencies consult local authorities and other interested parties as appropriate. In many cases the local authority is offered an agency agreement to monitor the owner's compliance with the undertakings.

When an advisory agency consults a local authority or other body, the normal rules on taxpayer confidentiality apply, and any information given in connection with a claim or designation for conditional exemption is therefore confidential.

Home Income Plans (Tax Relief)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many non-taxpayers are in receipt of tax relief for home income plans; and if he will indicate the distribution of tax relief paid out for home income plans by income group. [3320]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: I regret that reliable information is not available.

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has of the revenue which would be raised by restricting mortgage interest tax relief at source, for new mortgage payers only, to (a) 10 per cent. in 1997–98, (b) 5 per cent. in 1998–99 and (c) 0 per cent. in 1999–2000. [3405]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The revenue yield in 1997–98 and future years would depend on future interest rates and the future distribution of the number and value of new mortgages.

Uncollected Tax

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of uncollected (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) value added tax and (d) other taxes in (i) 1991–92, (ii) 1994–95 and (iii) 1995–96; and if he will make a statement. [3385]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The information is given in the following table. In this question, "uncollected" has been taken to mean "uncollected and subsequently written off or remitted".

Inland Revenue collection accounts are drawn up each year to the end of October, and the table therefore shows the amounts as at the end of October 1991, October 1994 and October 1995 (the latest date for which figures are available). Customs and Excise accounts are drawn up for each calendar year.

Amount remitted/written off

£ million

Type of tax	October 1991	October 1994	October 1995
Income tax	524	853	593
Corporation tax	321	262	127
Other taxes	39	44	36
Value added tax	515	550	484
Customs and other duties	0.7	1.7	5.9

The boards of Inland Revenue and of Customs and Excise allow remissions of tax on a case-by-case basis as an aspect of their responsibilities for the care and management of the various taxes.

Sound management requires that tax which is not collected and which cannot practicably be collected—for example, because the taxpayer is insolvent or his whereabouts are unknown—should be written off.

Insolvencies, where the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise have very little control over the amount recoverable, account for the vast majority of tax written off.

Tax Allowances

Mr. Alison: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of allowing married couples to choose joint income tax assessment on the assumption (a) that each would retain their personal allowance, (b) that the 20 per cent. and 24 per cent. rate bands were doubled and (c) that the married couples allowance was not given. [2823]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The estimated full-year cost at 1996–97 income levels of allowing married couples to choose whether they are taxed under the current system of independent taxation or taxed under the proposed joint taxation regime is about £5 billion.

Building Societies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will amend the building societies legislation in order to safeguard the interests of disabled people whose accounts are held by trustees in the context of bonus payments given by building societies at the time of flotation. [2744]

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to ensure that investors, with severe disabilities, whose account is managed by a third party, will benefit from payments consequent upon building societies converting to banks. [2699]

Mr. Angela Knight [holding answers 7 November 1996]: The existing law allows building societies to take account of the interests of underlying beneficiaries, including disabled investors and others in this position, but the final structure of any distribution is a matter for the society concerned, and it is for its members to decide whether they agree that distribution. I understand that the Building Societies Association has issued guidance to its members on future account opening and handling practice in advance of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 coming into force on 2 December.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) to what extent the membership and voting rights of the Governor of the Bank of England on the European Monetary Institute will be modified if the United Kingdom declares against proceding to the third stage of economic and monetary union; [51]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom representation at the general council of the European central bank, referred to in article 45 of the statute of the European system of central banks, if the United Kingdom decides not to join the third stage of EMU. [8]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Governor of the Bank of England would retain his voting rights in the Council of the European Monetary Institute irrespective of whether the Government were to decide that the United Kingdom should participate in the third stage of economic and monetary union.

The governing council of the European central bank will be the main decision–making body of the ECB and will take decisions about the single monetary policy. Only governors from the central banks of countries participating in the single currency and members of the executive board of the ECB will be members of the governing council. Only nationals of those member states may be members of the executive board, including the president and vice–president of the ECB. In addition, the treaty provides for a general council of the ECB, which will have very limited responsibilities. The general council shall comprise the president and vice–president of the ECB and the governors of all member states' national central banks.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Dounreay Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent safety and environment reviews have been conducted by (a) the Health and Safety Executive, (b) the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and (c) the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency into nuclear-related operations at Dounreay. [2958]

Mr. Page: There have been no recent safety and environmental reviews, but Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate, on behalf of the Health and Safety Executive, carries out regular inspections of nuclear safety related operations on the Dounreay site. SEPA also carries out regular inspections to ensure that conditions of the discharge authorisations are in compliance with the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 and these will be continuing.

Business Links

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade in what form and on what scale his Department will continue to fund business links beyond their third year of operation. [3777]

Mr. Page: DTI funding for business links beyond their third year of operation is in the form of a grant to the relevant training and enterprise council for business link services.

The scale of funding for business links beyond their third year is currently being considered in the 1996 public expenditure survey.

Packaging

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the current situation in respect of the EC's proposals on packaging and packaging waste. [3655]

Mr. Page: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environmental published for consultation on 11 July 1996 the draft Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations, which propose to implement the provisions relating to the recovery and recycling targets contained in the EC directive on packaging and packaging waste, 94/62/EC. Responses received during the consultation period, which ended on 30 September, are now being considered. It is intended to implement certain other provisions in the directive by means of section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, along with others relating to the identification and marking of packaging, when Commission decisions and a further Parliament and Council directive are adopted.

Minimum Wage (Hairdressing)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will re-introduce a minimum wage in occupations where the service provided is not traded internationally, with particular reference to hairdressing. [2081]

Mr. John M. Taylor: No. The Government have no intention of introducing minimum wage legislation. Statutory wage fixing would lead to increased costs and job losses in hairdressing as in any other industry.

Trade Deficit (Germany)

Mr. Renton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the trade deficit with the Federal Republic of Germany in (a) visibles and (b) invisibles for 1996; and what were the equivalent figures for (i) 1995 and (ii) 1994. [3868]

Mr. Lang: The UK current account balances with unified Germany, for 1994, 1995 and the first eight months of 1996, are given in the table.

£ million

	1994	1995	1996 (January–August)
Goods	–4,669	–5,960	–4,392
Services	+462	+638	n/a
Investment income	+46	+293	n/a

Joint Equipment Initiative

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the eligibility criteria for the provision of funds for capital expenditure under the joint equipment initiative; and if he will make a statement. [3690]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The eligibility criteria can be found in the guidelines for the initiative, which were issued on 26 February 1996. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support has been provided to universities under the joint equipment initiative; what were the targets set for the initiative; and if he will make a statement. [3689]

Mr. Taylor: The awards to be made under the joint research equipment initiative have yet to be announced, so no figure is currently available for the support provided to universities under the initiative. The objectives of the scheme were as follows:

To enable high-quality research relevant to the foresight generic science and technology priorities to be conducted with the equipment;

To contribute more generally to the physical research infrastructure in higher education institutions;

To promote partnership between higher education institutions and external sponsors of research, such as industry/commerce, charities, Government Departments, agencies and NHS trusts;

To assist the funding councils, the Department of Education Northern Ireland and research councils in taking a strategic overview of the equipment needs of the UK higher education sector.

Research Councils Procurement Officer

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what annual savings targets have been set for the newly appointed central procurement officer for the research councils. [3691]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The procurement adviser has been set a number of key objectives for his first year, including an impact on the procurement bill. During the first three calendar months he will assess the current state of procurement practices and performance within the councils and on that basis will propose targets and define the parameters for savings taking account of both purchase price and where applicable life-cycle cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Female Detainees

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were detained in prisons, under Immigration Act powers, at the end of (a) July, (b) August and (c) September; what were the nationalities of those detained; how many were deported; and in which prison establishments they were detained. [1043]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many women were detained in prison, under Immigration Act powers, at the end of (a) July, (b) August and (c) September; what were the nationalities of those detained; how many were deported; and in which prison establishments they were detained.

The information requested on those detained is given in the attached table. Provisional information shows that between July and September 4 persons were recorded as being discharged for removal by the Immigration Service.

Prisoners (Drugs Tests)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the number of prisoners tested for drugs each month since March 1996, (b) the number of prisoners who have tested positive for each type of drug in each month since March 1996 and (c) the number of prisons testing for drugs each month since March 1996. [1499]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the numbers of prisoners tested for drugs, the number of prisons testing and the number of prisoners testing positive for each drug type since March 1996.

The attached table sets out the numbers tested and the numbers testing positive for each drug under all forms of Drug Strategy testing. These comprise the random, on suspicion, risk assessment, frequent testing and on reception types of mandatory drug test, and voluntary testing. Since forms of targeted testing of drug misusers are included in these figures and because multiple drug positives from a single sample have all been counted, these figures indicate higher levels of drug misuse than those for random mandatory drug testing previously published in Hansard. Since the end of March this year all prison establishments have been testing for drugs.

Prisoners (Earnings)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the rules which govern the earnings of prisoners in United Kingdom prisons and the discretion given to individual prison governors. [1420]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter in so far as it relates to England and Wales has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given. The rules governing the earnings of prisoners in Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the rules which govern the earnings of prisoners within the United Kingdom. The rules governing prisoners' earnings in Scotland are a matter for the Secretary of State for Scotland, so this reply only relates to England and Wales.

Under Rule 28(6) of the prison Rules 1964 (as amended) relating to England and Wales, prisoners may be paid for their work at rates approved by the Secretary of State, either generally or in relation to particular cases. The present Prison Service pay scheme for prisoners, introduced in 1992, is designed to encourage prisoners to engage in purposeful activity (work, education or other purposeful activity); to allow governors flexibility to use pay to meet their local priorities; and to ensure a reasonable degree of uniformity in rates of pay for similar work in different establishments.

Under the scheme prisoners willing to engage in purposeful activity but who cannot be offered a place receive a wage sufficient to meet their basic needs (the basic rate). Prisoners who engage in purposeful activity and perform to an acceptable level of quality and effort receive a higher wage designed to meet their reasonable needs and to provide a real incentive to engage in such activity (the employed rate). These two rates of pay are set nationally, and currently stand at £2.50 and £4 per week respectively.

In addition, governors may set rates of pay above these amounts for prisoners engaged in purposeful activity to acceptable levels of quality and effort measured against targets made known to each prisoner in advance.

Within these parameters, governors will establish a standard working week for each activity according to the needs of the establishment; and they may establish differentials between activities in recognition of regime priorities, the regular working of long hours, environmental conditions, and any other factors which in the governor's view merit financial recognition. Governors therefore calculate their budgets for prisoner pay on the basis on an average of £7 per week (£8 per week in dispersal prisons).

Some prisons are able to operate schemes under which prisoners may earn higher amounts for higher productivity. Such schemes must be self-financing. Average earnings under the schemes currently running is about £15 per week, although a few prisoners have been able to boost their earnings to £30 in some weeks.

The Prisoners' Earnings Act 1996, which receive Royal Assent in July, provides a framework by which governors can make deductions from the wages of a prisoner earning enhanced wages in a prison operating the enhanced wages scheme. This allows for payments to be made in respect of a prisoner's own maintenance and accommodation, to support their dependants, towards organisations involved with victims and crime prevention and towards savings against release. It is intended that the Act will be implemented in spring next year.

Doncaster Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the current complement by grade of (a) part-time and (b) full-time staff employed by Premier Prison Services at Her Majesty's prison Doncaster; and what changes to staffing levels there have been in the last 12 months; [2712]

(2) how many serious assaults there have been on staff in her Majesty's prison Doncaster since 1 June; and what has been the total number of assaults on staff at the prison since it was opened; [2716]

(3) how many and what types of incidents have been reported to the Prison Service in relation to Her Majesty's prison Doncaster since (a) 1 June and (b) its opening; [2714]

(4) what is the current ratio of non-health staff to prisoners at (a) Her Majesty's prison Doncaster and (b) other similar grade prisons; [2713]

(5) how many prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Doncaster have been subject to closed visits since it was opened; and what is the current number; [2717]

(6) what percentage of temporary release decisions have resulted in temporary release failures at Her Majesty's prison Doncaster (a) since 1 June and (b) since Her Majesty's prison Doncaster was opened; and for each period what was the average failure rate among similar grade prisons; [2711]

(7) how many serious assaults there have been on prisoners in Her Majesty's Prison Doncaster since it was opened. [2715]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about HMP Doncaster.

The number and type of incidents during the periods covered by your questions recorded centrally for the purpose of analysing trends within prisons are shown on the attached table.

Charges of assaults proven following a disciplinary adjudication were as follows:

Date	Assaults on prisoners	Assaults on staff/others
1 June 1996 to 31 October 1996	53	20
Opening (20 June 1994) to 31 October 1996	280	219

The percentage of temporary release failures at Doncaster and all other local prisons and remand centres were as follows:

Percentage

	20 June 1994 to 31 October 1996	1 June 1996 to 31 October 1996
Doncaster	10.52	None
Other local prisons and remand centres	0.48	0.09

Records have not been kept of the number of prisoners subject to closed visits since the prison opened. Currently 51 prisoners are receiving closed visits.

On 5 November 1996 the ratio of staff (excluding healthcare staff) to prisoners at Doncaster was 1:2:16 and the ratio of similar staff to prisoners in other category B local prisons was 1:2:77.

Information about the overall number of staff in each grade is commercially confidential, but the Prison Service agreed to fund 5 additional prisoner custody officers to introduce at its request a dedicated search team in line with mandatory requirements at other prisons. 12 additional programme and clerical staff have also been recruited to reflect an increase in the capacity of the prison to 900 prisoners.

The complement of full-time staff on 1 November 1996 was 458 compared to 449 on 1 November 1995. The equivalent numbers of part-time staff are, respectively, 17 and 14.

Prison Service Performance Indicators

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to increase the number of key performance indicators for the Prison Service which assess standards of custody and control; [2936]

(2) what plans he has to introduce key performance indicators for the Prison Service which assess (i) headquarters staffing levels, (ii) productivity, (iii) efficiency, (iv) standards of staff development and commitment and (v) rates of recidivism; [2937]

(3) what plans he has to increase the number of key performance indicators for the Prison Service which assess (i) standards of physical security and (ii) levels of prisoner discipline; [2938]

(4) what plans he has to introduce key performance indicators for the Prison Service which assess (a) levels of drug use, (b) availability of rehabilitation services and (c) rates of self-inflicted deaths. [2939]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about the introduction of new key performance indicators (KPIs) for the Prison Service.

Under the terms of the Framework Document, the KPIs for the Prison Service have to be agreed with Ministers. They are kept regularly under review to ensure that they reflect current key priorities for the Service. Our Corporate Plan 1996–99 explained that Ministers had agreed a number of changes to our KPIs for this year. The Service has achieved in full the KPIs on access to sanitation, and the number of prisoners with the opportunity to exceed minimum visiting entitlement, and these have therefore been discontinued. Three new KPIs were introduced: on the rate of positive testing for drug misuse, the number of prisoners completing programmes accredited as effective in reducing re-offending, and the amount of staff training. Targets for each of these were set for the current year.

Some of the areas you refer to are already covered by existing KPIs, at least in part: for example prisoner discipline is reflected in the KPI on rates of assault, standards of custody are reflected in the KPI on the escape rate, the levels of drug use are reflected in the KPI on positive testing for drug misuse, efficiency is reflected in the KPI on cost per place and staff development in the KPI on the amount of staff training.

Clearly, there is a great deal of public interest in information about the Prison Service. I believe it important to keep KPIs to a manageable number, if we are to focus staff effort and other resources to achieve better results, particularly at a time when the Service is under great pressure. The Home Secretary announced, on 20 May 1996, that some management information not currently featured in KPIs would routinely be reported in our Corporate Plan. The current Corporate Plan includes, for example, information about self-inflicted deaths, staff turnover rates and Headquarters overheads.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the results achieved by the Prison Service on each of its key performance indicators for the first six months of 1996–97; and what assessment he has made of those results against (a) the published full year targets for 1996–97 and (b) the equivalent phased internal targets for the first six months. [2935]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the results achieved by the Prison Service on each of its key performance indicators (KPIs) for the first six months of 1996–97.

Prison Service KPI performance and targets for 1996–97 and performance from April to September 1996 are shown below (we do not set monthly targets within the annual target because performance on some KPIs is subject to considerable seasonal fluctuation). However, where necessary I indicate below the level of performance required over the rest of the year in order to achieve the target.

KPI 1: Escapes from prisons and from escorts:

To ensure no Category A prisoners escape and to ensure that the number of escapes from prisons and from escorts, expressed as a proportion of the prison population, is at least 10% lower than in 1995–6.

	Category A prisoners	Rate (Per cent.)
1996–1997 target	0	0.21 or lower
April–September 1996 performance	0	0.23

KPI 2: Assaults

To ensure that the number of assaults on staff, prisoners and others, expressed as a proportion of the average population, is lower than in 1995–6.

1996–1997 target: lower than 10.6%

April–September 1996 performance: 9.4%

KPI 3: Random drug testing

To ensure that the rate of positive testing for drugs (the number of random drug tests that prove positive expressed as a percentage of the total number of random tests carried out) is lower in the fourth quarter of 1996–7 than in the first quarter of that year.

April–June 1996 performance: 23.9%

April–September 1996 performance: 23.8%

January–March 1997 target: lower than 23.9%

KPI 4: Overcrowding

To ensure that no prisoners are held three to a cell designed for one.

April–September 1996 performance: No prisoners

KPI 5: Purposeful activity

To ensure that prisoners spend on average at least 26.5 hours per week engaged in purposeful activity.

April–September 1996 performance: 25.4 hours per prisoner per week (this figure is subject to further validation).

We would need to achieve an average of 27.6 hours of purposeful activity per prisoner per week for the rest of the year in order to meet the target.

KPI 6: Time out of cell

To ensure that, by 31 March 1997, at least 60% of prisoners are held in establishments which unlock all prisoners on the standard or enhanced regime for at least 10 hours per weekday.

September 1996 performance: 67%

KPI 7: Completions of accredited offending behaviour programmes

To ensure that at least 1,300 prisoners complete programmes accredited as being effective in reducing re-offending, of whom 650 should complete the Sex Offender Treatment Programme.

	Overall completions	Sex Offender Treatment Programme completions
April–September 1996 performance	402	136
April–September 1996 target	650	325
April 1996–March 1997 target	1,300	650

We would need to ensure that 140 prisoners a month complete accredited offending behaviour programmes, of which 86 a month should complete the Sex Offender Treatment Programme, in order to meet the target.

KPI 8: Cost per place

To ensure that the average cost of a prison place does not exceed £24,388.

It is not possible to show a meaningful mid-year figure because spending is not evenly distributed across the year and because the number of places is increasing over the year as new accommodation comes on line. We are however forecasting expenditure outturn within the cash limit, as revised to take account of additional funding agreed in year.

KPI 9: Average training days per staff member

To ensure that on average, staff spend at least six days in training.

April–September 1996 performance: 2.31 days per staff member

We would need to provide an average of 0.65 days training per staff member per month for the rest of the year in order to meet the target.

Mr. Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the way in which statistics are collected for the purpose of measuring the key performance indicators which refer to the Prison Service. [2940]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. George Howarth, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking if there were any plans to revise the way in which statistics are collected for the purpose of measuring the key performance indicators which refer to the Prison Service.

The Prison Service currently collects its KPI data using a variety of information systems. These collection procedures are under constant review to ensure that monitoring of the KPIs is carried out as promptly and accurately as possible.

Maintenance Work

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current backlog of maintenance work in (a) prisons and (b) police stations. [2798]

Miss Widdecombe: The Prison Service has an on-going programme to identify, prioritise and carry out maintenance work. Priorities are to preserve a safe and secure environment for prisoners and staff alike and to ensure that as far as reasonably practicable accommodation is kept in use to help cope with the pressure on places resulting from the rising prison population. Because of the nature of maintenance work it is possible that during the year other maintenance schemes might have to be given a higher priority than schemes already in the programme. The situation is monitored and reviewed on a regular basis and the programme revised as necessary.

Despite financial constraints, the schemes which have been identified as having the highest priority are proceeding in 1996–97. Around 50 per cent. of schemes—worth £16 million—have been deferred until later.

Maintenance work in police stations is the responsibility of individual police forces and records are not held centrally.

Dog Breeding

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions govern a local authority's duties in respect of the prosecution of a person breeding more than two bitches for the purpose of sale without a licence. [3639]

Mr. Sackville: Section 4 of the Breeding of Dogs Act 1973 empowers a local authority to prosecute a person who keeps an unlicensed dog breeding establishment.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, columns 324–25, what are the names and addresses of the companies or individuals convicted under the Breeding of Dogs Act 1973, as amended by the Breeding of Dogs Act 1991, since 1980. [3502]

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests for information the (a) police pension scheme and (b) fireman's pension scheme have received from pension providers undertaking reviews of pension transfers and opt–outs; in how many cases all appropriate information has been supplied; what is the average length of time taken to supply such information; and what moratorium has been introduced on supplying such information. [3348]

Mr. Maclean: The details requested are not held centrally. It is Government policy that assisting pension providers with their review should not impose a burden on the taxpayer. We hope that the necessary amendments can be made soon to the Police Pensions Act 1976 and the Fire Services Act 1947 to enable police and fire authorities to deal with the inquiries of personal pension providers in return for a reasonable charge to recover the administrative costs involved.

Soliciting

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) men and (b) women cautioned in each of the last five years for soliciting, broken down by age. [3650]

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the tables.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue guidance to local authorities about funding from April 1997 under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1996. [4452]

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce his decision regarding the continued funding of schemes in Trafford currently funded under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966. [3823]

Mr. Kirkhope: We attach great importance to the valuable work performed by teachers and others funded under section 11 in helping members of ethnic minorities to overcome barriers of language or culture. Despite other pressures on public expenditure generally, I can now announce that the current level of section 11 grant will be maintained until August 1998. Grant recipients are being advised accordingly.

Buckley Hall Prison

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason two different figures were given in letters of 29 October from the Director General of the Prison Service to the hon. Member for Rochdale for the number of assaults at HMP Buckley Hall since 14 December 1994. [3360]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Ms Liz Lynne, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your Question about the different figures given in my letters of 29 October about the number of assaults at Buckley Hall prison since 14 December 1994.

I very much regret that my replies did not distinguish between and explain the different kinds of data used in replying to each Question.

The number of assaults given in response to your Question about all types of incidents was taken from information recorded on a central database. This provides an analysis of trends within the Prison Service on a wide range of types of incident for use in incident management. They do not take account of the number of individuals who have been involved in a single incident, whether an assault or otherwise, nor do they take account, in the case of assaults, of whether there is a resulting finding of guilt either in an internal disciplinary adjudication or criminal proceedings.

The figures given in response to the Question about the number of assaults that had occurred were based on the number of charges of assaults proven following an internal disciplinary adjudication. This information is used for the purposes of a Key Performance Indicator.

Steps are being taken to ensure that future Questions are answered in a way that makes this distinction clear.

Hand Gun Licences

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information his Department collates on the number of persons currently licensed to carry handguns in the countryside for the purposes of killing animals for sport. [3109]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Killing animals for sport would normally not be considered a good reason for possessing a hand gun.

Electric Shock Dog Collars

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines he has issued to (i) police authorities and (ii) the Prison Service on the use of dog collars that administer electric shocks to the animals; [3073]

(2) which (i) police authorities, (ii) prisons and (iii) sectors of the Prison Service are using dog collars that administer electric shocks to the animals; [3074]

(3) what is the number of dogs owned by (i) the police and (ii) the Prison Service on which electric shock dog collars (a) have been used and (b) are being used. [3075]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answers 11 November 1996]: The Prison Service has possessed an electric collar since January 1994. It is kept at the national dog training centre and has been used a total of seven times on six dogs.

The electric collar is not currently being used on any dog and is only ever used in accordance with the policy guidelines issued on 19 July 1996. These guidelines state that the electric collar will be used only when authorised by the head of the NDTC. It will be used on adult dogs as part of a training course or remedial training and only as a last resort when other methods of attempting to correct the dog in control-related exercises have failed. The collar is not to be used as a short–term solution for problems that can be resolved by other more traditional and acceptable methods. All uses of the collar are registered at the NDTC.

The police have no national guidelines for the use of electric dog collars and information on its use is not collected centrally.

Ella O'Dwyer

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons applications for compassionate parole by Ella O'Dwyer, detained in Maghaberry prison, have been refused; how many such applications she has made in the current year; what her prison status is; and if he will make a statement. [3303]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Ms O'Dwyer is a prisoner temporarily transferred to Northern Ireland. Applications for temporary release are therefore considered with reference to her eligibility under the rules which apply to prisoners in England and Wales. As a category A high escape risk prisoner, Ms O'Dwyer is not eligible for any form of temporary release under those rules. However, we have the power to authorise release under section 27 of the Criminal Justice Act 1961 and have therefore considered each of Ms O'Dwyer's three applications for release on compassionate grounds carefully and on their individual merits. I did not consider, however, that there were sufficient compelling grounds to justify granting release exceptionally.

Prisoner Escapes

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how convicted prisoners escaped from a private coach on 5 November in London while being transferred from Her Majesty's prison, Blundeston; for what reasons a secure vehicle was not used; what changes he expects to make to the system for transporting prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [3392]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 November 1996]: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. David Porter, dated 13 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about how convicted prisoners escaped from a private coach on 5 November in London while being transferred from Blundeston prison; for what reasons a secure vehicle was not used, and what changes are excepted to be made to the system of transporting prisoners.

The prisoners who escaped were category B prisoners. Our policy on the transporting of category B prisoners is that they should be transported in as secure a vehicle as possible, based on a thorough risk assessment of the likelihood of escape. In this particular case it was decided that a secure vehicle was not required.

A senior director in the Prison Service has completed an enquiry into the incident. He has put forward nine recommendations, which I have accepted. He has recommended that we should aim to use secure cellular vehicles for all multiple escorts of category B prisoners, as soon as the necessary equipment can be acquired. The Director of Security has been asked to examine the implementation of this recommendation.

Prisoner Repatriations

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 440, when the requests for repatriation to prison in the Irish Republic from Harry Duggen and Joe O'Connell will be decided; when the appropriate documents will be referred to the Irish Republic; and if he will make a statement. [3784]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 12 November 1996]: Agreement to repatriation requests requires the consent of both states as well as of the prisoner concerned. Requests are decided only after consideration of all the relevant information by the two states concerned. An initial decision on whether to refer the requests of Mr. Duggan and Mr. O'Connell to the Republic will be made once all the relevant information is available.

WALES

General Practitioners

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will report progress on the survey of general practice practitioners and trainees in Wales; when he expects the results of the survey to be compiled; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [2643]

Mr. Hague: The information is not yet in a suitable form for publication. A decision on publication will be made when the work has been completed. I cannot yet indicate when this will be.

Prescribed Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of, and how many, people admitted to hospital have been suffering from adverse reactions to a prescribed drug in each of the last five years and in age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2904]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of people admitted to hospital as a result of an adverse reaction to a prescribed drug is not available centrally. However the number of people admitted as a result of an adverse reaction to any drug is given in the following table.

Finished consultant episodes—adverse effect of drugs

Note:
[1] Data for 1995–96 are not comparable to earlier years as records are not available for all hospitals and the diagnosis code used was different from earlier years.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many elderly (a) men and (b) women have been admitted to hospital in Wales as a consequence of an adverse reaction to (i) non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, (ii) phenothiazines, (iii) diuretics, (iv) analgesics, (v) night sedation, (vi) digoxin, (vii) laxatives, (viii) corticosteroids, (ix) beta blockers and (x) aminophylline in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [2901]

Mr. Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Maintenance Work

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the current backlog of maintenance work in (a) educational institutions, (b) prisons and police stations, (c) council housing, (d) transport infrastructure, (e) the NHS and (f) defence bases in Wales. [2793]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Prisons and police stations are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. Defence bases in Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. Information on the backlog of work in educational institutions and council housing is not held centrally. Information regarding transport and council housing is not held centrally. Information regarding transport infrastructure could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The latest figure for backlog maintenance in the NHS is £275 million as at March 1995.

Graduates

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of young people graduated in the last available year; and what comparisons he has made with the figures for (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) each member of the European Union. [3038]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In 1994–95 11,045 UK domiciled students graduated with a first degree from Welsh higher education institutions. These represented 31 per cent. of the population of 21-year-olds, corresponding to the most common age at graduation. On a similar basis, 32 per cent. of young people graduated from Scottish higher education institutions and 30 per cent. from English higher education institutions.

Information is not available on a comparable basis for 1994–95 for other European Union countries, but limited information is available for 1991–92 and is shown on the following table.

Health Authority Funding

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the additional non-recurring funding allocated to each health authority in the current financial year; and how much has been allocated to each contracted health care provider. [3438]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Up to the end of October, Welsh health authorities have received the following non-recurrent funding allocation additions:

Health Authority	Total additional funding £000s
North Wales	4,198
Dyfed Powys	3,084
Morgannwg	3,738
Bro Taf	5,644
Gwent	3,924

Details on health care providers' income are not kept centrally.

TRANSPORT

Red Routes

Mr. Keith Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken to measure pedestrian activity along red routes (i) before and (ii) after their implementation. [3437]

Mr. Bowis: The traffic director for London, who is responsible for co-ordinating the introduction of the red route network, monitors the effects of implementation through comprehensive surveys each year. These surveys monitor pedestrian activity on shopping streets and the number of shoppers arriving on foot. The results of surveys in spring 1994, before implementation began, were included in "Red Routes and Retailing" published in October 1995. The next set of results from surveys conducted in spring 1995 will be published shortly. As more of the red route network is implemented, these annual surveys will provide a representative before and after picture of the effect of red route measures.

Bridge Strengthening Programme

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expenditure on the bridge strengthening programme planned for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98 and (c) 1998–99. [3695]

Mr. Watts: Each year the Government provide the Highways Agency with an overall budget for the maintenance of trunk road structures and, through transport supplementary grant and credit approvals, support to local highway authorities for their bridge programme. For 1996–97 the Highways Agency's budget for structures capital maintenance is £130 million, and approved expenditure by local highway authorities is £103 million. In neither case are funds specifically earmarked for bridge strengthening. Figures for subsequent years have not yet been determined.

HEALTH

Eye Tests (Children)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision his Department has made for national eye screening of children. [2316]

Mr. Malone: An examination of the eyes is a mandatory part of all neonatal examinations conducted by a paediatrician, general practitioner or health visitor. A test for visual acuity is also conducted, usually by the school nurse, on entry to school. Health authorities are expected to assess the needs of their populations for visual examinations and organise appropriate screening programmes to meet these needs. Information is not collected centrally on the precise arrangements made in each authority area.

Guidance on the need for visual examinations has been issued in the publication "Health for All Children" first published in 1989. The latest edition was issued in 1996 and commended to health authorities in the guide, "Child Health in the Community: A Guide to Good Practice", published on 5 September 1996.

It is for health authorities to decide how to implement this guidance but, in most areas, school nurses undertake sight tests shortly after a child starts school. Health authorities are expected to monitor these arrangements and, in addition, the Department is in regular contact with representatives of paediatricians, ophthalmologists and nurses on developments in the assessment and treatment of sight defects in children.

Prescribed Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues to general practitioners prescribing drugs to the elderly; and if he will make a statement. [2791]

Mr. Malone: Advice on prescribing issues, including prescribing for elderly patients, is available to general practitioners from a variety of sources. Publications funded by the Department include the British National Formulary, which is regularly updated and provides advice for all doctors on the choice of suitable drugs, and the "MeReC Bulletin", which provides prescribing advice to all general practitioners. Copies of the British National Formulary are available in the Library. Copies of the "MeReC Bulletin" will be placed in the Library shortly.

Health Authorities

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make additional funding available to meet the estimated deficits for the current financial year in health authorities (a) in the west midlands and (b) across England and Wales. [3284]

Mr. Malone: No additional funding is planned in the current financial year in England. Questions relating to Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Health authorities received an average cash increase of 3.9 per cent. in 1996–97. Health authorities are expected to manage within these resources and will benefit also from on-going improvements in efficiency.

Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the minutes of meetings of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation held in the last year; and if he will make such minutes publicly available in the future. [3425]

Mr. Horam: The minutes of the meetings of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation are confidential. This is to ensure full and frank discussions can be recorded on issues which may include factors affecting external commercial interest and personal medical information. The recommendations of the committee, as endorsed by Ministers, are made available in the publication, "Immunisation Against Infectious Disease", the most recent edition of which was published in September 1996 and copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the next meeting of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation will take place; and what issues will be discussed. [3424]

Mr. Horam: The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation meets twice annually; its next meeting is on 13 November. As with all JCVI meetings, discussion will cover all aspects of communicable diseases preventable, or potentially preventable, through immunisation.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he has received from the hepatitis sub-group of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation regarding universal vaccination against hepatitis B; and if the next meeting of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation will consider this subject. [3426]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State receives advice on immunisation from the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. The next meeting of JCVI is on 13 November and will include further discussions on the control of hepatitis B in the United Kingdom, as well as other immunisation matters.

Teenage Smoking

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his revised target date for meeting the "The Health of the Nation" target on teenage smoking; and what steps he is taking to reach this target. [3427]

Mr. Horam: Efforts will continue to achieve the target level of 6 per cent. for teenage smoking as soon as possible.

The teenage lifestyle programme, "Respect" was launched in July and will cost up to £1 million a year for three years. Adult health education programmes will encourage parents to set a good example. Other measures in the Government strategy, including increasing tax and preventing illegal sales, are continuing.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of whether the series of events for teenagers currently being sponsored by the Gallaher tobacco company conforms to the voluntary agreement on tobacco advertising in respect of (a) the requirement not to encourage smoking in general and

(b) the requirement not to target young people; and if he will make representations to the company to halt further events pending clarification. [3428]

Mr. Horam: The operation of the voluntary agreement is overseen by the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship. I have no reason to suspect that the events being sponsored by Silk Cut breach the voluntary agreement, but I am confident that the committee will fully investigate any evidence put to it.

Abortions (Folic Acid)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the effect on the incidence of abortions of adding folic acid to bread. [3589]

Mr. Horam: Folic acid is currently added to some 10 per cent. of bread. Fortifying bread with this vitamin has only been practised, as a voluntary measure by the manufacturers, in very recent years. It is not possible to assess whether this limited and recent change in the diet has had an effect on the incidence of spontaneous abortions or whether this change has influenced the number of pregnancies affected by neural tube defects whose outcome has been termination of pregnancy.

A sub-group of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Food and Nutrition Policy is considering whether extending such fortification is advisable, and is expected to report late in 1997.

Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the last meeting of the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health took place; and what was discussed. [3420]

Mr. Horam: The Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health last met on 15 October 1996. The committee received information on the progress of work it has commissioned on environmental tobacco smoke and lung cancer and on ETS and childhood respiratory diseases. The structure and content of the first report of SCOTH to the Chief Medical Officer were discussed and suggestions for the future work programme were considered.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest advice his Department has issued to (a) purchasers and (b) providers of infertility treatment in the NHS; if he will place this information in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [2068]

Mr. Horam: Decisions about provision, priority and resources for infertility services are made by individual health authorities, who are in the best position to determine priorities in the light of local needs and circumstances. The decisions must be made on the basis of sound evidence.

Advice is available to health authorities and clinicians in the following publications:

The Effective Health Care Bulletin on "The Management of Subfertility" (August 1992), published for the NHS management executive by a consortium of Leeds and York universities and the research unit of the Royal College of Physicians.

The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists "Infertility—Guidelines for Practice".

Copies of these are available in the Library.

The RCOG is reviewing its 1992 guidance as part of a project sponsored by the Department of Health. The revised guidelines should be available to clinicians next year.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned in the last two years into the effectiveness of alternative infertility treatments. [2069]

Mr. Horam: None. Information on research commissioned by the Department of Health is contained in the "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme" and the "Centrally Commissioned Research Programme: Commissions in 1994–95", copies of which are available in the Library.

Children in Care

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children on care orders are placed in bed–and–breakfast accommodation. [3644]

Mr. Burns: This information is not separately available as the details collected centrally do not distinguish bed and breakfast from other lodging or independent accommodation.

Secure Hospitals

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects disciplinary and grievance procedures for staff to be in place for (a) Ashworth, (b) Rampton and (c) Broadmoor. [3645]

Mr. Burns: Disciplinary and grievance procedures are in place at all three high security hospitals.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of breaches of security incidents in each of the last five years for (a) Rampton, (b) Ashworth and (c) Broadmoor. [3646]

Mr. Burns: The following tables list the number of breaches of security incidents at the three high security hospitals. For the purposes of this survey roof top incidents were classified as a breach of security although incidents of this kind are not uncommon in a high security mental health environment. Staff are fully trained to deal with this challenging group of patients and untoward incidents in the three hospitals are speedily contained and swiftly resolved.

It is worth pointing out that thousands of rehabilitation programmes outside secure mental health environments take place every year without incident. The secure hospitals are places of treatment and care, and rehabilitation is a key component of the management of people with severe and enduring mental health problems. In view of the level of public concern over recent patient absconds while on rehabilitation programmes, the following measures were deemed necessary.

The High Security Psychiatric Services Commissioning Board, the three special health authorities, specialist clinicians, the mental health and community care division of the Department of Health and the Home Office have established, with immediate effect, a steering group to examine professional practice around rehabilitation programmes outside secure mental health environments.

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list the number of recorded assaults on staff in each of the past five years at (a) Rampton, (b) Ashworth and (c) Broadmoor; [3647]

(2) if he will list the number of prosecutions for assaults on staff in each of the past five years for (a) Rampton, (b) Ashworth and (c) Broadmoor; [3648]

(3) on what dates the most recent work place risk assessments for (a) Broadmoor, (b) Rampton and (c) Ashworth were completed. [3649]

Mr. Burns: Data about recorded assaults on staff in each of the past five years, the number of prosecutions for assaults on staff and the most recent work place assessments at Ashworth, Rampton and Broadmoor are not kept centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Janice Miles, the chief executive of Ashworth hospital authority, Ms Sheila Foley, the chief executive of Rampton hospital authority, and Mr. Alan Franey, the chief executive of Broadmoor hospital authority for further information.

National Health Service

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are his plans for the future of the national health service; and if he will make a statement. [4276]

Mr. Dorrell: I have today published a White Paper on the way forward for the national health service entitled, "The National Health Service: A Service with Ambitions". Copies will be available in the Vote Office and the Library. It sets out the Government's commitment to a universal, high quality service, available on the basis of clinical need, and one that is responsive to the needs and wishes of patients and carers. It also launches three initiatives designed to improve the use of information in the NHS; to strengthen its commitment to effective management of quality; and to ensure that our policies for education, training and development produce well qualified staff who will meet the needs of a changing NHS.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Teacher Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the percentage of college graduates obtaining teaching posts in each year from 1989–90. [2996]

Mr. Ancram: The available figures are:

1989–90: 88 per cent.

1990–91: 91 per cent.

1991–92: 96 per cent.

1992–93: 98 per cent.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the size of the approved intake of students into colleges of education in the current and future years and the reasons for his decisions on future teacher supply. [2997]

Mr. Ancram: This year's intake number was maintained at last year's total of 340 places. No decisions have been taken on future years' intakes as each year's allocation is based on an annually updated forecast of teacher demand.

Student Costs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the unit cost per student and constant price cost per student in each year from 1989–90, starting with unit cost per student equalling 100 in 1989–90. [2998]

Mr. Ancram: The recurrent cost per full-time equivalent student, excluding student support, at universities in Northern Ireland, indexed so that 1989–90 equals 100, has been as follows:

	Cash prices	Constant prices
1989–90	100	100
1990–91	105	97
1991–92	107	93
1992–93	106	89
1993–94	105	86
1994–95	103	82

Source:
Universities' Statistical Record data, 1989–90 to 1993–94; HESA data 1994–95.

The spending per full-time equivalent student, excluding support, in further education colleges in Northern Ireland, indexed so that 1991–92 equals 100, has been as follows:

	Cash prices	Constant prices
1991–92	100	100
1992–93	98	94
1993–94	101	95
1994–95	106	98

Comparable figures for 1989–90 and 1990–91 are not available.

Universities (Student-Staff Ratio)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the student-staff ratios in universities in each year since 1989–90. [2999]

Mr. Ancram: The staff-student ratios are as follows:

1991–92: 1:15.6

1992–93: 1:15.7

1994–95: 1:14.8[1].

[1] Revised figure. The ratio for 1994–95 is not comparable with the ratios for earlier years, because of a change in the basis of the count of staff in 1994–95.

Higher Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of young people in Northern Ireland have entered higher education in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years. [3000]

Mr. Ancram: The proportion of young people aged under 21 expressed as a percentage of the Northern Ireland 18-year-old population, has been as follows:

1988–89: 22.4

1989–90: 25.6

1990–91: 27.0

1991–92: 29.2

1992–93: 33.3

1993–94: 37.0

1994–95: 38.5

1995–96: 41.7[1].

[1] Provisional.

Further Education (Staff–Student Ratio)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the staff–student ratio in further education in (a) 1989–90 and (b) 1995–96. [3001]

Mr. Ancram: The relevant staff–student ratios are as follows:

1995–96—1:14.01.

Further Education (Teachers)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of full-time equivalent teachers in further education in 1989–90; and what it is currently. [3002]

Mr. Ancram: The relevant numbers of full-time equivalent teachers are as follows:

1995–96: 2,813.02.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what facilities exist for the training of further education lecturers in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [3003]

Mr. Ancram: New full-time, permanent lecturers who do not already possess an approved teacher training qualification are expected to achieve the postgraduate certificate in further and higher education within three years of appointment. In-service training awards are available from the Department to assist such lecturers attend this part-time course at the University of Ulster.

Further Education (Students)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the age profile of full-time students in further education (a) in 1989–90 and (b) currently. [3004]

Mr. Ancram: The age profile of full-time students in further education in each year is as follows:

Age	Full-time enrolments
1989–90
Under 18	14,887
19–24	1,645
25–34	327
35–44	90
45 and over	113
1995–96
Under 18	19,425
19–24	3,858
25–34	432
35–44	137
45 and over	82

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of full-time equivalent students enrolled in further education but taking higher level courses in each year since 1989–90. [3006]

Mr. Ancram: The number of full-time equivalent students enrolled in further education but taking higher level courses in each year since 1989–90 are as follows:

Year	Full-time equivalents
1989–90	1,441
1990–91	1,531
1991–92	1,620
1992–93	1,961
1993–94	2,295

Year	Full-time equivalents

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the number of young people enrolled on national vocational qualification and general national vocational qualification courses in further education in recent years. [3007]

Mr. Ancram: In 1993–94, 995 national vocational qualifications awards were made by the main bodies to persons aged 19 or under; in 1994–95 the figure was 756. Enrolments in general national vocational qualifications programmes in further education colleges were as follows:

1992–93: 566

1994–95: 5,234.

Further Education (Costs)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the cost of a full-time equivalent place in further education in constant prices in each year since 1989–90. [3005]

Mr. Ancram: The spending per full-time equivalent student in further education colleges has been as follows:

Constant 1995–95 prices

1991–92	2,946
1992–93	2,783
1993–94	2,789
1994–95	2,874

Comparable figures for 1989–90 and 1990–91 are not available.

Surplus School Places

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many surplus primary and secondary school places were removed in the last school session; and if he will make a statement. [3008]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 1,295 primary school places were removed in the 1995–96 school year. No surplus secondary school places were removed.

School Pupil Costs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the recurrent cost per pupil in primary, secondary and special education in each year since 1989–90, starting with the current cost in that year equalling 100. [3009]

Mr. Ancram: Expenditure per pupil figures in constant prices is as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Primary: 1992–93 (£1,429) = 100	100	107	114
Secondary: 1992–93 (£2,243) = 100	100	105	111

Information for primary and secondary is not available for 1989–90, 1990–91 or 1991–92 on a comparable basis. Summary information on all forms of special education is not available.

School Pupil-Teacher Ratios

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the pupil-teacher ratio in primary and secondary schools in each year since 1989–90. [3010]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is contained in the table.

Pupil-teacher ratios in Northern Ireland schools

	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Primary[1]	23.2	22.8	22.6	22.2	21.6	20.8
Secondary[2]	14.7	14.7	15.1	15.2	15.1	14.8

[1] Includes pupils and teachers in nursery and reception classes.

[2] Includes secondary and grammar schools.

Department of Education (Costs)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a breakdown of the administrative costs of the Department of Education by sub-headings in each year since 1989–90. [3011]

Mr. Ancram: I will write to the hon. Member when the information becomes available.

Domestic Rates

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average rate bill per household in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [3939]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Rate Collection Agency under its chief executive, Mr. David Gallagher. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from David Gallagher to Dr. Marjorie Mowlam, dated 13 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average rate bill for households in each of the last ten years.

The average rate bill for domestic properties in each rating year from 1987/88 was:

Year	Average (£)
1987–88	233.57
1988–89	254.71
1989–90	284.55
1990–91	309.79
1991–92	222.20
1992–93	224.79
1993–94	230.59
1994–95	251.41

Year	Average (£)
1995–96	294.57
1996–97	[1]305.00

[1] Estimate.

The above figures have been calculated by taking the total sum of rates assessed for domestic properties (including Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties) and dividing that sum by the total number of domestic properties.

I hope that you find this information helpful.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of a reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1996; and if he will make a statement. [3779]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 12 November 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend will not be submitting any rules or regulations to the Deregulation Committee.

In its deliberation of the 1994 Deregulation and Contracting Out Bill, Parliament decided that the general order-making power which enables Ministers to amend primary legislation by subordinate order for deregulatory purposes would not extend to Northern Ireland.

Any deregulatory measures introduced in Great Britain by means of reference to the Deregulation Committee will, where appropriate, be replicated in Northern Ireland by the Order in Council procedure.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Feline Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to (a) encourage the reporting and (b) collate statistics on the incidence of feline spongiform encephalopathy, indicating the dates for each action taken; and if he will make a statement. [435]

Mrs. Browning: Since November 1994, the diagnosis of any transmissible spongiform encephalopathy in the laboratory, other than those produced by experimental means in the course of research, has been officially notifiable. A free post mortem examination for FSE to encourage the reporting of FSE cases by veterinary practitioners has been available through the veterinary investigation service of MAFF since May 1990.

Statistics have been collated by the Government since 1990, when the first case of FSE was confirmed. FSE statistics were provided for the hon. Member on 11 November 1996, Official Report, columns 73–74.

Peanut Warnings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what obligations (a) companies, (b) organisations and (c) individuals providing catering facilities have to warn customers who may be allergic to peanuts of their presence in food that they provide; and if he will make a statement; [3234]

(2) what obligations manufacturers of food products containing peanuts have, in addition to listing the products' ingredients, with regard to warning sufferers from peanut-related allergic reactions of the presence of peanuts; and if he will make a statement. [3233]

Mrs. Browning: All food offered for sale must meet the food safety requirements of the Food Safety Act 1990. There is no specific rule requiring caterers to indicate the presence of peanuts in their foodstuffs. However, many establishments are now aware that some consumers suffer reactions to peanuts and indicate their presence, or absence, in the food that they sell. This is either by a motif or by using the word peanut in the name of the food. Manufacturers of prepacked food have taken similar steps on product labels. There is a legal obligation that such information should not mislead the purchaser.

Smallholdings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assistance his Department gives to encourage smallholdings. [3452]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry's policies and support for agricultural businesses apply both to smallholdings and to larger businesses. In carrying out our various programmes to improve the economic performance of the agriculture industry, full account is taken of the needs of small businesses. Small businesses also benefit from the Ministry's implementation of the Government's deregulation policies.

Fisheries Agreements (West Africa)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 28 October, Official Report, column 52, what has been the United Kingdom's contribution to the fisheries agreements with the west African countries. [3822]

Mr. Baldry: The annual cost to the Community budget of the EC fisheries agreements with west African countries is estimated to be 212 million ecu or £166 million. The UK's contribution will be around 15 per cent.

Argentine Beef Imports

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on trends in the levels of imports into the United Kingdom of Argentine beef since 1993; what checks are made at ports of entry for the presence of steroids in such beef; and if he will make a statement. [3787]

Mr. Baldry: Overseas trade statistics for imports of beef from Argentina into the United Kingdom are as follows:

1995:[1] 28,289

1996 to July:[1] 14,634.

All data are in tonnes.

All third countries intending to export animal products to the EU are required to submit plans for residue surveillance for approval by the EU standing veterinary committee. They are also required to submit their results to the Commission as evidence that the surveillance plans are being carried out. Such imports are checked upon entry to verify compliance with animal and public health conditions of import, including conditions relating to steroids. All imports undergo a documentary check. In addition, a percentage are subject to additional identity and physical checks, including checks for prohibited hormones.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the estimated reduction in expenditure on (a) social security benefits, (b) welfare benefits and (c) free school meals for social security benefits recipients if all those aged 18 to 65 years, who were able to work, earned (A) £120, (B) £140 and (C) £160 per week gross of tax and national insurance contributions and 16 and 17-year-olds earned (i) £60, (ii) £70 and (iii) £80 per week gross. [2002]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is set out in the tables.

Table 1 shows the net benefit savings if all the claimant unemployed earned the levels stated.

Table 2 shows the additional net benefit savings if those currently in work with earnings below the levels stated were to earn the stated value, and work 30 hours or more a week. All figures must be regarded as broad estimates of the potential benefit savings.

Table 1: Net benefit savings if the unemployed claimant earned £120, £140 or £160 per week

	Earnings
	£120	£140	£160
Net benefit savings	£6,900 million	£7,300 million	£7,600 million

1 Estimates are based on 2.1 million unemployed, at 1996–97 prices.

2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £100 million.

3. All claimants unemployed are assumed to work 30 hours or more a week.

4. All partners of claimants unemployed who are identified as in work and earning below the level stated are assumed to work for 30 hours a week at the new level of earnings.

5. Net benefit savings include the value of free school meals.

6. Estimates exclude expenditure implications for welfare benefits.

7. Sixteen and 17-year-olds are deemed to earn £60, £70 or £80 per week in place of £120, £140 and £160 respectively.

8. Estimates are based on figures from the 1996 departmental report, the 1995 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry and the 1994 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1996–97 prices.

Table 2: Net benefit savings if those currently in work earning less than the value earned £120, £140 or £160 per week

	Earnings
	£120	£140	£160
Net benefit savings	£1,000 million	£1,300 million	£1,600 million

1. Estimates are set at 1996–97 prices.
2. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £100 million.
3. All those affected are assumed to work at least 30 hours a week.
4. Net benefit savings include the value of free school meals.
5. Estimates exclude expenditure implications for welfare benefits.
6. Sixteen and 17-year-olds are deemed to earn £60, £70 or £80 per week in place of £120, £140 and £160 respectively.
7. Estimates are based on the 1995 Quarterly Statistical Enquiry and the 1994–95 Family Resources Survey uprated to 1996–97 prices.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the date on which the Child Support Agency received an application from the parent with care in case 1017680981 for a compensatory award and the date on which he expects that case to be referred to the special payments branch; and if he will make a statement. [2972]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. David Lidington, dated 12 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency case reference 1017680981.

An application for compensation was received on 5 January 1996. In this case, the Agency could not consider the application until a full maintenance assessment had been calculated. A full assessment was calculated on 29 May 1996, and since then every effort has been made by the Agency to secure regular maintenance for the parent with care, culminating in the imposition of a deduction from earnings order on 1 October 1996.

The claim for compensation was passed to the Agency's Special Payments Branch on 1 November 1996. Based on the information then available, it was decided that a compensation payment was not appropriate. However, further information has since come to light and it has now been accepted that compensation can be paid. A revised decision has been issued and a compensation payment of £1,651.73 paid.

I hope this is helpful.

Statutory Sick Pay and Maternity Pay

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of raising statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay to the level of the lower earnings limit and of the number of people gaining from this. [2782]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that the gross cost of raising the current rate of statutory sick pay and lower rate of statutory maternity pay to the lower earnings limit would be around £135 million per annum. It is not possible to estimate the number of people who would gain from this as many people will already be covered by occupational sick or maternity pay schemes and there is no reliable current information on the extent of this cover.

Note:
Estimated expenditure is at current prices and is rounded to the nearest £5 million.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Alan Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what were the amounts and types of benefit recouped by the compensation recovery unit which have been reimbursed to the national insurance fund for (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96. [2780]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Alan Howarth, dated 12 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking, what were the amounts and types of benefit recouped by the Compensation Recovery Unit which have been reimbursed to the National Insurance Fund for *(a)*1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96.

The information requested is shown in the attached table.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

[1] These amounts have been reimbursed to the National Insurance Fund. The amounts for all other benefits have been reimbursed to either Votes 1 or 2 of Class XIII Appropriation Accounts.

Private Pensions

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners currently receive private personal pensions; what percentage they comprise of all pensioners; and how many are estimated to receive a personal pension smaller than the level of the basic retirement pension. [3049]

Mr. Heald: Approximately 250,000 or 2.5 per cent. of people over state pension age derive an income from a personal pension. This represents 2.5 per cent. over state pension age. The income from the personal pension was less than the value of the standard rate of state retirement pension for a single person in around 160,000 cases.

Family Resources Survey 1994–95.

Pensioner Incomes

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of basic retirement pensioners who have a total disposable income in excess of (a) twice, (b), three times and (c) four times the basic retirement pension. [3052]

Mr. Heald: The information is in the table.

Disposable income of pensioner units

	Level of disposable income
Pensioner units	Over two times basic retirement pension	Over three times basic retirement pension	Over four times basic retirement pension
Pensioner couples	1,200,000	550,000	300,000
Single pensioners	1,250,000	500,000	200,000
All pensioner units	2,450,000	1,000,000	450,000

Source:

Pensioners' Incomes Series 1993, based mainly upon data from the Family Expenditure Survey 1993.

1. Estimates of numbers have been rounded to the nearest 50,000 pensioner unit. A pensioner unit is defined as being a single person over state pension age, or a couple where the husband is over state pension age. Components may not sum to totals due to rounding.

2 Disposable income has been defined as net income before housing costs for the purposes of this analysis.

3. The level of standard rate basic retirement pension in 1993 was £54.15 for single pensioners and £86.70 for pensioner couples until April, and from then on £56.10 and £89.80 respectively. For pensioner couples, the information in the table is based upon multiples of the couple rate.

4. The estimates given above are calculated from the number of Family Expenditure Survey respondents who at the time of interview had a disposable income in excess of two, three or four times the standard rate basic retirement pension at that time. The calculations do not, therefore, involve deflating prices to July 1993 levels, consequently results are not directly comparable with published pensioners' Incomes Series results.

Lone Parents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent on benefit for single parent families in (i) 1979, (ii) 1990 and (iii) 1994–95 in equivalent terms. [3093]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is in the table.

	1979–80	1990–91	£ million 1994–95
Cash	730	4,680	8,884
At 1995–96 prices	1,874	5,574	9,128

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has in respect of the compensation recovery unit. [3383]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 7 November, Official Report, columns 681–82.

"Households Below Average Income"

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the next edition of "Households Below Average Income" will be published. [4277]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis 1979—1993–94" will be published on Thursday 14 November at 9.30 am. Copies will be placed in the Library and made available to Members in the Vote Office.

Benefits Agency Staff

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many Benefits Agency customer services staff there are; and what estimate he has made of the likely change in numbers in the next financial year; [3349]

(2) how many persons worked within his Department's Benefit Agency as customer service staff in the last year for which figures are available. [3345]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information regarding the total number of Benefits Agency customer service staff is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information regarding the number of district information officers is available only for 1995–96; approximately 450 were employed.

Local Offices (Hampshire)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the performance targets for each social security office in Hampshire for (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and how many of these targets were achieved in 1995–96 in each case indicating how these targets and achievements relate to those set nationally. [3355]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

The tables provide performance targets and achievement covering the Benefits, Child Support and Contributions Agencies. Only the Benefits Agency has individual targets for offices within Hampshire.

Note:

Hampshire offices are dealt with by the Plymouth Child Support Agency centre, but separate performance figures for those offices are not collected.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the number of people who have suffered a reduction in related earnings allowance with the introduction of the retirement allowance in each Benefits Agency office in Hampshire. [3354]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the policies governing advice for social fund applications undertaken by the Benefits Agency. [3352]

Mr. Roger Evans: Section 140 of the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992 requires that

"A social fund officer shall determine any question in accordance with any general directions issued by the Secretary of State and in determining any question shall take account of any general guidance issued by him."

That guidance is contained in the social fund guide and is intended to explain the basis for social fund officers' powers to determine applications to the discretionary social fund and to help them interpret the Secretary of State's directions in a consistent and flexible way.

Section 140 also requires social fund officers to take account of any guidance issued by the social fund officer nominated for his area under section 64 of the Administration Act 1992. This local guidance concerns the level of priority of applications which can be met from the district budget.

Regionalised Benefit Rates

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to regionalise benefit rates; and if he will make a statement. [3263]

Mr. Roger Evans: None. Regional benefit rates would be complex and expensive to administer.

Computer System

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress with the installation of the NIRS 2 computer system; and for what reasons Andersen Consulting will not have the system fully operational in February 1997. [3264]

Mr. Heald: Progress on the development of the NIRS 2 computer system is currently proceeding in accordance with the contractual timetable. Under the contract with Andersen Consulting it was always the intention that the system would be fully operational by April 1999. This is still the planned date for NIRS 2 to be fully operational.

Claimant Entitlement Decisions

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what plans he has to restrict support for departmental employees in establishing claimants' benefit entitlements; [3341]

(2) what plans he has to remove independent adjudication of claims from the social security system; [3342]

(3) what proposals he has to change current regulations governing claimants' rights and service levels. [3344]

Mr. Roger Evans: Full details of the Government's proposals for new decision making and appeals processes are set out in the Green Paper, "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security", Cm 3328, which was published on July 23. The Green Paper was issued to a wide range of organisations with an interest in social security matters. Comments on the proposals were invited by 18 October.

The responses received—around 440—are currently being independently analysed. We plan to publish the results of the consultation exercise early in the new year and we will ensure that a copy is placed in the Library. Final decisions on the best way forward will be taken in the light of all the representations received.

Privatisation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals for privatisation in the social security system. [3343]

Mr. Roger Evans: There are no proposals for privatisation of the social security system.

Involvement of the private sector in the Department of Social Security is part of a wider programme of change to reduce running costs and improve efficiency.

Correspondence

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when a reply will be sent to the letter from the hon. Member for Rochdale to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State dated 22 August, relating to Mr. R. Marsh of 43 Haslam street, Rochdale, Lancashire. [3786]

Mr. Roger Evans: I replied to the hon. Member on 23 October.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

School Discipline

19. Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received regarding measures relating to school discipline in the Education Bill. [2089]

Mr. Forth: While preparing the legislation, we have received a large number of representations from head teacher and teacher organisations, local authorities, school governors and other bodies with an interest in promoting good behaviour and effective discipline in schools.

21. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to improve school discipline. [2091]

Mr. Forth: The Education Bill introduced on 30 October includes a package of measures to strengthen schools' ability to take action in the face of poor behaviour and discipline; to help ensure there is proper support for schools in dealing with pupils with behavioural problems; and to promote effective provision for such pupils out of school where necessary.

Education Funding (Staffordshire)

20. Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she last met the chief education officer of Staffordshire county council to discuss the level of education funding; and if she will make a statement. [2090]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend met Dr. Hunter, the chief education officer of Staffordshire, on 4 November. They discussed a number of issues concerning education in Staffordshire.

Primary School Class Sizes

22. Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make it her policy to reduce primary school class sizes. [2092]

Mr. Robin Squire: It is the Government's policy to allow local authorities to determine the distribution of available resources between their primary and secondary schools; and to allow governors and head teachers to manage the distribution among classes of pupils, teachers and support staff.

Teaching Unions (Meetings)

24. Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will review the practice of teaching union representatives attending meetings during schools hours. [2094]

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for local management in the light of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service code of practice on time off for trade union duties and activities.

Lostwithiel Primary School

25. Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she will make a decision on Cornwall local education authority's application for funding to assist with the cost of the Lostwithiel county primary school rebuilding programme; and if she will make a statement. [2095]

Mrs. Gillan: All local education authorities' bids for capital funding under annual capital guidelines and for grant aid for projects at voluntary aided schools, are currently being assessed. Decisions will be announced shortly before Christmas.

Standard Spending Assessments

26. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to change the SSA calculations for local education authorities. [2096]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will make a statement on the SSA methodology for 1997–98 shortly after the Budget.

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means, and by what date, she will ensure the details of the education standard spending assessments for 1997–98 will be available to hon. Members. [3510]

Mr. Squire [holding answer 11 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be making a statement shortly after the Budget. Written details of the education standard spending assessments for local authorities in 1997–98, together with details of the SSAs for the other major services, will be available at that time.

Higher and Further Education Institutions

27. Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) higher education institutions and (b) further education institutions currently do not have cash reserves to cover 30 days of total expenditure. [2097]

Mr. Forth: Eighty-eight higher education institutions did not have net cash balances sufficient to cover 30 days' expenditure at 31 July 1995. At the same date, 128 further education institutions had less than 30 days' cash in hand.

Pupil Exclusions

28. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils have been excluded from secondary schools in England in the last 12 months. [2098]

Mr. Forth: The latest figures on exclusions, which relate to the school year 1994–95, show that 8,870 pupils were permanently excluded from secondary schools in England.

School Funding

29. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to review the allocation of resources to schools which under-perform. [2099]

Mr. Robin Squire: None.

Unemployment (East London)

30. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the percentage of unemployment for (a) men and (b) women in Ilford, South in November 1990; what it is currently; and what plans she has to introduce further measures to reduce unemployment in east London. [2100]

Mr. Forth: Claimant unemployment rates are not available at constituency level. Claimant unemployment figures for Ilford, South in November 1990 was 1,633 men and 606 women. In September 1996 the figures were 3,251 and 1,126, respectively.

However, I am pleased to say that unemployment in both south Ilford and east London is falling in line with national trends. Unemployment in south Ilford fell from a peak of 5,403 in August 1993 to 4,377 in September 1996. Similarly, unemployment in east London fell from a peak of 55,709 in April 1993 to 41,029 in September 1996.

In east London, as elsewhere, the Employment Service and the training and enterprise councils will continue to deliver a wide range of programmes to help people find the best and quickest route back to employment. In particular, on 7 November I announced plans to extend the project work pilots to a number of areas across the country, including a large part of east and north-east London, which includes south Ilford.

Claimant Register

31. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the reasons for which people have left the claimant register over the last year. [2101]

Mr. Forth: Of those leaving claimant unemployment with a known destination, around 70 per cent. do so because they have found work.

School Commendations

32. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many grant-maintained and local education authority schools won Office for Standards in Education commendations for excellence in the most recent year for which information is available. [2102]

Mr. Robin Squire: Of the 203 schools commended by the chief inspector in his 1994–95 annual report, 39 or 19 per cent. are grant-maintained and 162 are maintained by local education authorities; one is a city technology college and one is an independent special school. This contrasts with the underlying proportion of GM schools, compared with the rest of the state sector, of 5 per cent.

High-tech Businesses

33. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what recent consultations she has had on the training requirements of new high-tech businesses. [2103]

Mr. Paice: The Department provides support to industry training organisations and training and enterprise councils, which enables them to monitor and address training requirements including those related to new high-tech businesses.

Youth Unemployment

34. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for education and Employment what plans she has to introduce measures to reduce unemployment among 16 to 18-year-olds. [2104]

Mr. Forth: The Government will continue with policies to improve standards of education and training and create a flexible and deregulated labour market which have already delivered one of the lowest rates of youth unemployment in Europe. In particular, we shall continue to resist the imposition of policies such as the social chapter and the national minimum wage, which would destroy jobs and create youth unemployment at levels seen in France and Spain where those policies are in place and where youth unemployment stands at 29 per cent. and 39 per cent. respectively.

Unemployment Trends

35. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on trends in unemployment levels over the last year. [2105]

Mr. Forth: The United Kingdom started 1996 with unemployment lower than any other major European country and with unemployment falling at an underlying rate averaging around 10,000 per month. During the course of the year the labour market has continued to improve and the Office for National Statistics estimates that the underlying rate at which unemployment is falling now averages around 15,000 to 20,000 per month.

Workplace Training

36. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on policies to encourage workplace training schemes. [2106]

Mr. Paice: Employers must take the lead on workplace training. The Government's policy encourages them to look upon training as an investment by demonstrating the business benefits enjoyed by employers who invest effectively in training. Training and enterprise councils are working with employers in a variety of ways to help them address and manage their training needs. Our approach is working, recent surveys show that there has been a considerable increase in the number of employees receiving training in recent years.

The investors in people standard is helping employers to make their training investment effective by linking the training and development needs of their work force directly with the achievement of business goals. Almost 25,000 employers are committed to the standard, of which 4,330 are already recognised as investors in people.

European Social Fund

37. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to secure accelerated payments to qualifying organisations under the European social fund. [2107]

Mr. Paice: Payments of claims relating to approved European social fund projects cannot begin until the money arrives from the European Commission. Thereafter payment is made as soon as possible.

Training (Young People)

38. Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to extend training opportunities for those aged under 25 years. [2108]

Mr. Paice: The Government have consulted widely concerning the introduction of national traineeships and access and support strategies for 14 to 19-year-olds as recommended in Sir Ron Dearing's report on 16 to 19 qualifications. Details of the Government's plans for these new initiatives will be published in a White Paper in December. Modern apprenticeships continue to expand with over 41,500 young people starting training in 60 industry sectors.

Nursery Vouchers

39. Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much she plans to spend on publicity for the national implementation of the nursery voucher scheme. [2109]

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Touhig).

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will assess the impact of the jobseeker's allowance on rural areas. [2082]

Mr. Paice: We have commissioned a full evaluation of JSA policy from the centre for research in social policy at Loughborough university. The Employment Service itself will be carrying out local monitoring of delivery.

Home-school Contracts

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received on the introduction of home-school contracts for all schools. [2093]

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to oral answer that my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy).

Schools (Selection Applications)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many grant-maintained schools have (a) applied and (b) been approved to select up to 15 per cent. of their intake; and if she will name each such school and the selection criteria agreed. [2755]

Mr. Robin Squire: The following table lists the 43 grant-maintained schools which received approval to select up to 10 per cent. of their pupils on the basis of ability or aptitude in certain specified subjects between January 1989 and September 1996. Grant-maintained schools have not since then been required to obtain approval for changes to their admission arrangements which do not require the publication of statutory proposals. Circular 6/69, "Admissions to Maintained Schools", takes the view that admission authorities may select up to 15 per cent. of a school intake in any subject, or by general ability, without the need to publish statutory proposals.

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what regulations her Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1996; if she proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to determine the advantages or disadvantages of each such a repeal. [3202]

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 11 November 1996]: It is proposed to revoke the Education (Transfer of Functions Relating to Grant-maintained Schools) Order 1996, SI 1996/2247, and to make a fresh order with technical amendments. No compliance cost is involved. The effect of the order is to transfer the function in relation to the consent to borrowing by grant-maintained schools in England from the Secretary of State to the Funding Agency for Schools.

Travel-to-work Funding

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assistance is available to a person who lacks funds to travel to work in respect of a job opportunity verified by the local office of her Department. [3628]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. Peter Griffiths, dated 12 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the payment of fares to travel to work. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

While there are no schemes set up specifically to provide assistance with travel costs upon finding employment, Jobseekers who have been unemployed for two years or more may be entitled to claim the Jobfinder's Grant.

The purpose of the Grant is to encourage people to look for work by overcoming some of the barriers associated with the transition from benefits into employment.

Ongoing research has indicated that over 70% of Grant recipients cited the need to travel to work as one of the problems they had faced.

In addition, we have been running the Travel to Interview Scheme for a number of years to help unemployed people cope with the expense of getting to job interviews. The scheme does this by helping people who have been unemployed more than 13 weeks with travelling costs, and if necessary, overnight accommodation costs to attend job interviews outside their usual travel to work area. A few basic conditions must be met before assistance can be granted, to ensure the scheme is properly and fairly administered and gives good value for money. In the last year the scheme has helped nearly 47,000 applicants with travelling costs totalling £1.7m.

We also provide extra help for disabled people. People with disabilities can be given help with travel costs to attend job interviews and, if necessary, the travel costs of someone to accompany them, through our specialist Placing Assessment and Counselling Teams (PACTs). In addition, once a job has been secured, the Access to Work programme can provide help with the additional costs, resulting from disability, of getting to and from work.

I hope this is helpful.

Religious Education

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many secondary schools (a) have a member of staff specialising in religious education and (b) have no such member of staff. [3626]

Mr. Forth: The Department does not collect detailed information about the deployment of teachers in individual schools. However, the 1992 secondary school staffing survey indicated that over 90 per cent. of schools had at least one teacher with an RE qualification.

Mr. Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many teachers in training for secondary school posts are specialising in religious education. [3625]

Mr. Forth: In 1995–96, 494 students entered courses of initial teacher training in which religious eduction was either the main or second subject.

Secondary Schools (Unacceptable Placements)

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many secondary school age pupils are at present being kept at home because local education authorities have not offered placements acceptable to the parents. [3627]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

Teachers (Warwickshire)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many full-time equivalent teachers were employed in Warwickshire; and what was the pupil-teacher ratio in each year since 1991–92. [3511]

Mr. Forth: The number of full-time equivalent teachers employed in the maintained nursery, primary and secondary sector, including grant-maintained schools, and the overall pupil-teacher ratio, for the Warwickshire local education authority area are shown in the table.

Position in January each year

Warwickshire LEA area	FTE teacher numbers[1]	Overall PTR
1992	3,904	17.8
1993	3,961	17.8
1994[2]	4,017	17.7
1995[2]	4,027	18.0
1996[2]	3,875	18.9

[1] Excluding FTE teachers in special education and education elsewhere.

[2] Excluding sixth form colleges from 1994 onwards.

Pupils (Unit Costs)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proposals she has to publish the unit costs of pupils in primary and secondary schools in all local education authority areas in England for 1995–96. [3828]

Mr. Robin Squire: Provisional aggregate outturn expenditure per pupil for all LEA-maintained pre-primary, primary and secondary schools for 1995–96 will be published in the Department's annual report in March 1997. Data for individual LEAs should be available shortly thereafter.

Higher Education Staff

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to establish a pay review body for staff employed in higher education establishments. [3687]

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many contracts her Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if she will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if she will make a statement on the number of job reductions in her Department arising from the contracting out of work to EDS. [3795]

Mr. Robin Squire: Both the Department for Education and Employment and the Employment Service have recently signed contracts with EDS for access to the Government catalogue framework agreement for the supply of IT goods and services. EDS operates the catalogue on behalf of the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency. No modifications have been made to this contract.

The Student Loans Company entered into a contract with EDS for software to support its lending operations in 1989. In 1990, at the suggestion of EDS, the contract was extended to include the provision of loan repayment software. The total value of the contract was £3 million per annum. Early in 1993, the SLC signed a revised contract with EDS which transferred ownership of the software lending system to the SLC. In 1995 the contract ended.

There are no other contracts between the Department or its agencies and EDS. I am not aware of any further contracts between the Department's associated bodies and EDS.

There have been no job reductions in the Department, its agencies and associated bodies as a result of contracting out work to EDS.

Corporal Punishment

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will undertake a public consultation exercise on the value of corporal punishment in schools; and if she will make a statement. [2428]

Mr. Forth: No. Corporal punishment is an issue which gives rise to a wide range of sincerely held views. However, the Government's view is that its reintroduction would not solve problems of indiscipline in schools.

Teachers' Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many requests for information the teachers' superannuation scheme has received from pension transfers and opt-outs; in how many cases all appropriate information has been supplied; what is the average length of time taken to supply such information; and what moratorium has been introduced on supplying such information. [3346]

Mrs. Gillan: Approximately 7,000 requests for information have been received in respect of members of the teachers' superannuation scheme for England and Wales. Responses have been issued in more than 1,000 cases. The average time taken to deal with priority cases is between three and four weeks. The Teachers' Pensions agencies which administers the teachers' superannuation scheme, was unable to deal with requests for information until 1 October when regulations came into force which enable it to provide and charge for information and process re-instalments.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many independent schools receiving funds from the assisted places scheme publish full accounts which are publicly available; and if she will list them. [3397]

Mrs. Gillan: All 355 schools participating in the assisted places scheme in England are conducted for charitable purposes, as required by section 479 of the Education Act 1996. Copies of their accounts are lodged with the Charity Commission and are publicly available.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils benefiting from the assisted places scheme have been (i) temporarily and (ii) permanently excluded from their school in each of the past five years. [3398]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is not collected centrally. Where an assisted pupil is expelled from a participating school, assistance under the scheme ceases from the date of expulsion.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what checks are carried out by her Department of the administration by individual schools of applications under the assisted places scheme; and (a) how many random audit checks have been made to ensure parental assessments have been carried out, (b) how many of the random checks uncovered shortcomings in the school's administration and (c) what action was taken against schools where shortcomings were found in each of the past five years. [3399]

Mrs. Gillan: All schools' claims for fee remission are audited by independent auditors who have to be satisfied that the claims have been prepared in accordance with the regulations governing the scheme and are in agreement with the schools' own financial records. The auditors are expected to check a sample of the parental income assessments carried out by the school.

In addition, the Department carries out an annual audit survey on a random sample of participating schools to monitor their administration of the scheme, particularly with regard to their assessments of parental income. These surveys have identified a small proportion of cases with shortcomings which are drawn to the attention of the individual schools concerned in the sample and corrective action taken. After each survey, guidance is also issued to all schools in the scheme on the survey's findings to strengthen their administration.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many schools receiving funds from the assisted places scheme have had a full Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools or Office for Standards in Education inspection in the past five years. [3400]

Mrs. Gillan: All participating schools are covered in the cycle of independent school inspections carried out by Ofsted and the great majority have been visited by HMI in the past five years.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils have benefited from the assisted places scheme in each of the past five years; and what were total funds (a) allocated and (b) spent in each year. [3401]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is given in the report of the Department for Education and Employment, Cm 3210, published in March 1996, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many parents claiming funds under the assisted places scheme were (a) self employed and (b) unemployed in each of the past five years. [3402]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what checks her Department makes on schools which apply to receive pupils under the assisted places scheme. [3403]

Mrs. Gillan: Under section 479 of the Education Act 1996, the Secretary of State must have regard to the desirability of securing an equitable distribution of assisted places geographically and between boys and girls. Schools applying for admission to the scheme must be finally registered with the Department and conducted for charitable purposes only, and must satisfy stringent published criteria relating to the breadth and balance of their curriculum, the academic achievements of their pupils and the quality of their teaching staff. Information about the educational opportunities available, their intake policy and financial viability is also taken into account.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the independent schools which received funds from the assisted places scheme with, for each school (a) the number of pupils benefiting from the scheme and (b) the amount of money received in each of the past five years. [3404]

Mrs. Gillan: A copy of the relevant tables for the academic years 1991–92 to 1995–96 has been deposited in the Library of the House.

Jobcentres

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the number and location of jobcentres in each Scottish local authority area. [3699]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. James Wallace, dated 12 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the number and location of Jobcentres in each Scottish local authority area. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I can confirm that there are currently 132 Jobcentres in Scotland. For ease of reference I have attached as Annex 1 a detailed list of all Jobcentres and the corresponding local authority.

I hope this is helpful.

Job Vacancy Display Boards

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her policy regarding the location of the job vacancy display boards in libraries, community centres and post offices in Scotland; and what financial contribution has been made by each unitary authority in Scotland towards this service in each of the last three years. [3700]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mike Fogden to Mr. James Wallace, dated 12 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me to reply to your question about the policy on the location of job vacancy display boards in libraries, community centres and post offices in Scotland; and what financial contribution has been made by each unitary local authority in Scotland towards this service in each of the last 3 years. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Through its network of local Jobcentres, The Employment Service in Scotland regularly reviews the provision of job vacancy display boards to libraries, community centres and post offices according to the needs and availability of appropriate venues. The provision of such display boards depends on the local labour market covered and the need to ensure that a system can be put in place to keep vacancies on display up to date. Local authorities do not make a financial contribution to this service.

I hope this is helpful.

Physical Education

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what amount of time primary school pupils are expected to devote to physical eduction each week; and what school facilities her Department assesses are necessary to support this. [4057]

Mrs. Gillan: It is for schools to decide how much time to allocate for the teaching of physical education. In deciding how much time to allocate, schools may wish to bear in mind the recommendation in the Government's 1995 "Raising the Game" policy statement on sport that they should offer two hours a week of physical education and sport in formal lessons.

The Department makes no assessment of the facilities necessary to support physical education teaching; this is a decision for schools.

PRIME MINISTER

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to section 4 of the Government's response to the fourth recommendation contained in the second report of the Public Service Committee on ministerial accountability and responsibility, HC 67, Session 1996–97, if he will make it Government policy to answer parliamentary questions relating to events taking place more than 30 years ago. [3886]

The Prime Minister: To the extent that such questions are admissible under the rules of the House—"Erskine May", 21st edition, page 294—Ministers will seek to answer them, as any other question, in accordance with "Questions of Procedures for Ministers".

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 November. [2703]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 14 November. [2704]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Zaire

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the findings contained in the UN report relating to arms smuggling to Rwandan Hutus based in Zaire with particular reference to the role of United Kingdom companies in supplying arms. [3801]

Dr. Liam Fox: Inquiries by HM Customs and Excise, the appropriate investigating authority, undertaken as a result of earlier allegations that United Kingdom companies may have been involved in arms supplies to Rwanda groups, have not produced evidence to support criminal proceedings against any United Kingdom company or individual. HM Customs and Excise are in contact with the United Nations about their report and will provide details in response to appropriate requests.

Montserrat

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received, and what response he has made, in respect of the proposals to build an emergency jetty in the north of Montserrat; and if he will make a statement. [4078]

Dr. Liam Fox: A number of representations were received from residents of Montserrat and others regarding the environmental considerations of building an emergency evacuation jetty in Little bay. As with all such projects, the plans were subjected to an environmental impact study. The results of this were taken into account when the Government of Montserrat's planning authority approved the project on 30 October.

WALES

Planning Guidelines

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of giving additional weight to environmental impact in determining planning restrictions on agricultural holdings; [3364]

(2) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated into establishing practical criteria for assessing sustainable and low-impact developments, with particular regard to rural areas; and if he will make a statement; [3269]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the capacity of the planning system to accommodate low impact development; and if he will make a statement; [3358]

(4) what evaluation his Department has made of the capacity of the planning system to absorb a new (a) low-impact and (b) permaculture use class into existing guidelines; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of this policy; [3369]

(5) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated into the advantages of establishing a permaculture use class within the planning system; and if he will make a statement. [3375]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review (a) PPG7 and (b) other planning guidance on agricultural and other dwellings in the countryside in order to give greater weight to environmental and social sustainability; and if he will make a statement. [3378]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The main body of PPG7 has been cancelled in Wales. Planning policy guidance on rural development can be found in "Planning Guidance (Wales): Planning Policy" 1996, which is currently being reviewed. Guidance on agricultural dwellings will be contained in a proposed technical advice note on rural development, which should be issued shortly for public consultation.

Hospitals and Health Trusts (Deficits)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of hospitals and health trusts facing deficits during the current financial year. [3186]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Latest trust directors of finance monitoring returns, which projects estimated end of year financial positions—as at 30 June for those on quarterly monitoring and 31 August 1996 for those on monthly monitoring—identify six trusts with deficit at year end. Welsh Office officials are currently assessing the mid-year monitoring returns.

Publicity

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of staff employed full time or part time (i) to provide information and publicity and (ii) to work in press or media in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1993–94. [3567]

Mr. Hague: The costs of staff employed in the information division to provide publicity and press services for the Welsh Office were as follows:

Year	Publicity	Press
1993–96	186	431
1994–95	206	418
1995–96	257	403

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff were employed full time or part time by his Department to provide information and publicity in (i) 1995–96, (ii) 1994–95 and (iii) 1993–94. [3571]

Mr. Hague: The number of staff employed in the information division to provide information and publicity services for the Welsh Office were as follows:

1993–94: 23.5

1995–96: 23.9

Full-time equivalent

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost assumed in his Department's budget for people employed full time or part time to work on the press and the media in 1996–97. [3575]

Mr. Hague: It is £335,000.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was his Department's expenditure on consultants to assist with information, publicity, press and media in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1993–94. [3578]

Mr. Hague: Welsh Office expenditure on consultants to assist with information, publicity, press and media is as follows:

1993–94: £17,450

1995–96: Nil

Insulin Pen Needles

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the inquiry into the provision of insulin pen needles by the NHS, with particular reference to its implications for Wales. [3806]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: We are currently considering whether insulin injection pen needles should be made available on general practitioner prescription.

Engineering Training

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number in modern apprenticeships in engineering at (a) craft, (b) technician and (c) student levels in (i) Wales and (ii) each region of Wales for which statistics are available. [4138]

Mr. Hague: There is no information available centrally on the number currently participating in modern apprenticeships in engineering. Information from the Department for Education and Employment modern apprenticeship database indicates that the number starting on modern apprenticeships in engineering is as shown in the table:

Starts in modern apprenticeships in engineering[1], 1995–96

TEC area	Craft related occupations[2]	Other occupations[3]
Gwent	113	16
Mid Glamorgan	139	19
Powys	[4]—	24
North-east Wales	114	[4]—
North-west Wales	[4]—	[4]—
South Glamorgan	n/a	n/a
West Wales	105	71
Wales	494	136

Notes:

[1] Engineering is defined as: engineering manufacturing; air transport; telecommunications; electrical installation; engineering construction; marine engineering and Welsh manufacturing engineering. It excludes other sectors of manufacturing.

[2] Craft and related occupations are defined as: skilled construction; skilled engineering, metal machining and instrument making, electrical and electronic trade; metal forming, welding and related trades; vehicle trades; textiles; printing and woodworking; food preparation, horticulture and other craft occupations.

[3] This includes 14 in science and engineering associated professions.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Engineering Council for Wales concerning increasing the status of engineering among school leavers, school teachers and parents in Wales. [4132]

Mr. Hague: None, but from reports of routine contacts between my officials and the Engineering Centre for Wales I know that the centre's new executive chairman shares my keenness to raise the profile of engineering as a career choice for school leavers.

I understand that the centre is re-examining its strategies for achieving this, seeking to build upon existing links with the education business partnerships. It will also be a key player in Wales in helping to promote 1997 as the Year of Engineering Success—YES.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the boards of governors of university of Wales institutes at Cardiff and Newport, the chairmen of South Glamorgan and Gwent training and enterprise councils, and the chairman of the Higher Education Funding Council Wales in relation to the training and education of skilled and qualified engineers in south-east Wales. [4155]

Mr. Hague: The supply of skilled and qualified people for the manufacturing sector is a key priority in "People and Prosperity: an Agenda for Action in Wales" and, as such, features regularly in discussions which I and my Department hold with training and enterprise councils and the Welsh funding councils. I have asked the Higher Education Funding Council for Wales to give priority to science and technology courses and I met the chairman of the council last month to discuss progress. I shall be meeting the chairman of the Council for Welsh TECs on 18 November to discuss skills supply in manufacturing.

South-East Wales Ambulance Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the previous chairman of the South East Wales Ambulance Trust concerning the conclusions in relation to both value for money and regularity and propriety contained within the district auditor's reports of 11 November. [4156]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South East Wales Ambulance Trust regarding the contents of the district auditor's reports of 11 November, what proposals he has for ensuring the return of (a) the performance-related pay bonuses paid, (b) the cost of the camperwagon converted at public expense and (c) other trust funds diverted into private hands via the credit cards and fuel cards; and if he will make a statement. [4153]

Mr. Hague: None. My officials are continuing to monitor progress at the South East Wales Ambulance Trust and are receiving regular reports on issues raised by the district auditor. The trust has taken legal advice and, where appropriate, is doing all within its power to recover losses incurred.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the environment directorate of the European Commission concerning the complaint in relation to the Cardiff bay barrage. [4136]

Mr. Hague: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what independent legal advice he has sought on the implications of the Lappel bank judgment on the Cardiff bay barrage. [4135]

Mr. Hague: It is not my practice to disclose the nature of the legal advice I receive.

DEFENCE

Bosnia

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the British bases established as part of the IFOR operation in (a) Bosnia and (b) Croatia; and how much Britain is charged for these bases to be situated in each of these areas. [4058]

Mr. Soames: The British bases established as part of NATO's implementation force operation in Croatia and Bosnia, and the charges agreed for their occupation, are as follows:

	Monthly charge £
Location—Croatia
Split—Divulje barracks	No charge
Split—port facilities	117,000

Air Crashes

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) dates on which and (b) types of aircraft which his Department has lost through crashes in each of the last five years; and what were the causes of these accidents. [4059]

Mr. Soames: The information requested is given in the table.

Unexploded Bombs

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the precise location of the unexploded bombs in West Ham and East Ham. [4079]

Mr. Soames: The information available to my Department on this subject is obtained from public records. A summary was placed in the Library of the House in response to an earlier question from the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes), Official Report, column 863.

Sea Crusader

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the breakdown of the Japanese roll on roll off vessel, Sea Crusader chartered by his Department; when the vessel broke down; how many of its engines have broken down; when the vessel was chartered; what is the vessel's current position; what actions his Department has taken to replace the vessel; and if he will make a statement. [4061]

Mr. Soames: The Japanese-built vessel was the only suitable ro-ro available to meet the requirements of the joint rapid deployment force. Named RFA Sea Crusader, it was chartered on 17 September 1996, is a UK registered vessel and is manned and operated by the Royal Fleet Auxiliary. The vessel lost power in its starboard engine on 1 November 1996 while en route to its UK base at Marchwood. This reduced the ship's speed but it continued to carry out its operational duties. The engine fault has now been rectified under guarantee and at no cost to my Department. The vessel is due to arrive in UK waters in late November 1996 as originally planned.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3798]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As the management data held centrally for MoD headquarters contracts branches shows in excess of 150 live contracts and does not include the information required, the answers to this question could be provided only at disproportional cost. In addition, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 16 October 1995, Official Report columns 31–32.

Where chief executives of my Department's agencies exercise responsibilities for this matter under the terms of their framework documents, I have asked them to write to the hon. Member direct.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 14 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply on behalf of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about contracts with EDS. DERA is a next steps Agency within the Ministry of Defence which, through a predecessor agency, the Defence Research Agency (DRA), has had delegated authority to make contracts since 1991.

Our current contracts records system goes back to 1992, which is when the DRA introduced a new Improved Commercial Accounting System. These records show that DERA currently has 135 contracts with EDS at a total approximate value of £20.5M and 270 completed contracts with a total value of just under £21M. In the time available we have not been able to identify any direct job losses in DERA or its predecessor organisations arising from contracts with EDS.

I am sorry but the remaining information you have asked for could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Letter from J. C. R. Hunt to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 14 November 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence and his colleagues about contracts with EDS. I am answering on behalf of the Meterological Office to the extent that the questions fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

The Meterological Office has let only one contract with EDS in the period in question. It was let in May 1995 and its value was some £27K. The work involved was completed satisfactorily. No modifications to the specified work were called for either by myself or the contractor, there was no in-house involvement and in consequence no job reductions followed.

I hope this gives you the information you need.

Letter from Michael R. Pack to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 14 November 1996:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Defence a Parliamentary Question about contractual relations between his Department and EDS.

For the Hydrographic Office Defence Agency, the issues raised fall within the responsibilities delegated to the Chief Executive, Rear Admiral J P Clarke. In the normal course of events, Admiral Clarke would reply to you personally. However, he is at present absent from the Office on official duty and I am replying on his behalf.

Before 31 March 1996, contracts were not let by the Hydrographic Office but by the appropriate contract branch within the Ministry of Defence. Since becoming a trading fund on 1 April 1996, two contracts have been placed by the Hydrographic Office with EDS: one small contract to provide training in a software package for the management of geographic data; and a more substantial contract to provide post design services for the document management and geographic management systems themselves. The former is complete; the latter on-going.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Agency Letters

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions (a) non-departmental public bodies and (b) executive agencies responsible to his Department have provided answers by letter, with copies to the Library but not published in the Official Report in each of the latest available two years. [3159]

Mr. Howard: Questions which refer to the work of non-departmental public bodies responsible to my Department are answered by Home Office Ministers and published in the Official Report. Replies to questions which are prepared by the chief executives of Home Office agencies are published in the Official Report, except on those occasions where there is insufficient time to provide the information requested before the House rises for recess. In such cases, the chief executive gives an undertaking in the Official Report to provide an answer by letter, and to place a copy of the letter in the Library. There is no information available on the number of occasions when this procedure has been followed.

Police Dogs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department issues in respect of the interpretation of "reasonable force" as used in the making of an arrest by the police using police dogs. [3631]

Mr. Maclean: Home Office guidance on the training of police dogs indicates the importance of dog handlers identifying themselves as police officers and giving any person to whom a challenge is directed the opportunity to give themselves up before the dog is instructed to chase and detain, or search for, a person.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what monitoring is conducted by his Department to ensure police forces adhere to his Department's guidelines on the operational use of police dogs; [3630]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure regional training centres for police dog development adhere to Home Office guidelines on the training of police dogs. [3629]

Mr. Maclean: The training and deployment of police dogs is an operational matter for chief officers.

The operation of police dog units is monitored by Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary as part of its inspection procedure.

Illegal Entrants

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will break down the number of illegal entrants to the United Kingdom detected in 1995 in respect of (a) nationality, (b) the methods of entry into the United Kingdom stating the number in each category, (c) the length of time they had been in the United Kingdom before detection and (d) the manner in which they were detected, stating the number in each category. [3412]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on nationality and category is given in tables which have been placed in the Library. The other information requested is either not available or could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Fire Brigades (Health and Safety)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce a joint committee on health and safety under the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council; and if he will make a statement. [3525]

Mr. Sackville: Health and safety issues are currently dealt with in the existing joint committees. A review of the functions, costs and working practice of the Central Fire Brigades Advisory Council is in progress. Any changes in the council and sub-committee structure and terms of reference will be considered in the light of its recommendations.

Video Release Certificate

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many films have been refused a video release certificate by the British Board of Film Classification as a result of consideration of the new criteria contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1994; and if he will list their titles. [3539]

Mr. Sackville: The British Board of Film Classification has refused classification certificates to 12 video works since the introduction of the statutory classification criteria in the Criminal Justice and Public order Act 1994. The following works have been refused a certificate:

Kickboxer 4—The Aggressor;

Back in Action;

Bare Behind Bars;

Sadomania;

Demoniac;

Arrowhead;

Boy Meets Girl;

Schoolgirl Fantasy;

Mikey;

Ultimate Pursuits;

LA Blue Girl;

S & M Why?

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many videos certified for home release have been re-classified as a result of the review by the British Board of Film Classification arising from the change in the law contained in the Criminal Justice Act 1994; and if he will list their titles. [3540]

Mr. Sackville: I understand that the British Board of Film Classification has not reviewed the classification of any video works under the Video Recordings (Review of Determinations) Order 1995, which came into force on 1 November 1995.

Smoke Detectors and Sprinklers

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it compulsory for all retail establishments to be fitted with an appropriate number of smoke detectors and sprinklers. [3434]

Mr. Sackville: No. The need for smoke detectors or sprinklers in any particular retail premises must depend upon the outcome of a fire risk assessment for those premises.

Dog Breeding

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many dog breeding establishments have been inspected by local authorities since the Breeding of Dogs Act 1991 came into force; and how many were inspected in the period 1986 to 1991; [3760]

(2) how many licences have been issued each year since the passing of the Breeding of Dogs Act 1973; and what proportion of applications are refused; [3759]

(3) how many dog breeding establishments have been closed under the Breeding of Dogs Act 1991; and how many offenders have been fined the maximum amount under this legislation; [3771]

(4) what measures are being taken to ensure local authorities are complying with the requirements of the Breeding of Dogs Act 1973. [3773]

Mr. Sackville: Information is not collected centrally about the number of dog breeding establishments inspected by local authorities, the number of licences issued and applications refused, and the number of breeding establishments which have been closed down. So far as we are aware, no offender has been fined the maximum amount under the legislation.

The level of priority given to implementing the provisions of the Breeding of Dogs Acts is a matter for local authorities to determine.

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many dog breeders have been convicted under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 since 1966. [3772]

Mr. Maclean: It is not possible, from the information held centrally, to identify offences specific to dog breeding from other summary offences under the Protection of Animals Act 1911, as amended. In 1995, there were 754 recorded convictions under the Act.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers (a) were placed in detention at Saughton or Cornton Vale in 1996 and (b) were in detention in each month of 1996, broken down by (i) country of origin, (ii) length of detention and (iii) place of application. [3789]

Mr. Kirkhope: Information on the number of asylum seekers placed to detention at Her Majesty's prison Saughton or the Cornton Vale institute during 1996 is not available.

The requested breakdown of all detained asylum seekers, for selected dates during 1996, is given in the tables.

Handguns

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) homicides, (b) unlawful woundings and (c) accidental injuries notified to the police in which licensed handguns were used in each month since March. [3788]

Mr. Maclean: Information as to whether firearms used in offences are legally held is not at present routinely collected centrally in England and Wales. However, a special exercise has recently been carried out to find out whether the guns used in homicides were licensed. The exercise covers the years 1992 to 1994. Out of a total of 22 homicides in which the firearm was legally held, four involved handguns.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the continuation of section 11 funding. [4208]

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for funding under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 for pupil support after March 1997. [4100]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Mr. Thomason), Official Report, column 242.

Sparrow Hall, Liverpool

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in respect of crime from the Sparrow Hall community council in the Liverpool, West Derby constituency; and what response he has made. [3989]

Mr. Maclean: We have received a letter from Jean Hannah of the Sparrow Hall community council, and a reply was sent on 13 November. I understand that the area commander is developing a community partnership strategy to deal with local crime problems.

Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the high-intensity regime will open at the MCTC at Colchester; and if he will make a statement on the cause of the delays in opening the centre; [1761]

(2) what Prison Service training the officer who is in charge of the military corrective training centre at Colchester has had since July; what plans there are for further training; and if he will make a statement. [1762]

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 6 November 1996]: This is a unique initiative, requiring careful preliminary work. Much progress has already been made, and Colchester young offender institution will open when we have agreed the final details of the regime and completed the staff appointments.

By the end of July, the officer in charge of the military corrective training centre had undertaken training in relation to prisoner adjudications and the command of serious incidents, and had made several familiarisation visits to Prison Service establishments. Since July, he has undertaken finance training. Further training is planned on the staff code of discipline and staff appraisal.

TRANSPORT

Publicity

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the cost of staff employed full time or part time (i) to provide information and publicity and (ii) to work in press or media in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1993–94. [3569]

Mr. Bowis: The answers are £1,620,308, £1,491,230 and £1,538,298, respectively.

These figures combine the cost of staff who work on information, publicity, press and media for the Department and its agencies. The split between information, publicity, press and media could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It does not include the work of the public inquiry point, as this work is part of its general administrative duties and is not recorded separately.

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the cost assumed in his Department's budget for people employed full time or part time to work on the press and the media in 1996–97; [3577]

(2) what is the cost for staff employed full time or part time by his Department to provide information and publicity in 1996–97. [3573]

Mr. Bowis: The answer is £1,800,347.

This figure includes the cost of staff who work on information, publicity, press and media for the Department and its agencies. The split between press, media and information and publicity could be provided only at disproportionate cost. It does not include the work of the public inquiry unit as this is part of its general administrative duties and is not recorded separately.

Roads Expenditure

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the expenditure on roads in each county expressed as a figure per motor car based on the census figures for car ownership in each of the last 10 years. [2599]

Mr. Watts: This information is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Electric Vehicle Propulsion

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the advantages of subsidising research into electric vehicle propulsion and the installation of recharging facilities in large conurbations; and if he will make a statement. [3194]

Mr. Bowis: There are a number of research projects, such as the Coventry electric vehicle project, recently launched by my right hon. Friend and partly funded by the Energy Savings Trust, which are already assessing the benefits and practicality of electric vehicles in real-life situations. Although electric vehicles have yet to reach the point where they are a clear alternative to more conventional technology as a means of providing a cost-effective solution for urban air quality concerns, a variety of organisations are working to improve the technology and reduce costs. I am keeping this progress under review.

Marine Pollution Control Unit

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the annual expenditure on the marine pollution control unit in each year since it was established. [3638]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Coastguard Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from C. J. Harris to Mr. Nick Ainger, dated 14 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent Question about expenditure on the Marine Pollution Control Unit since it was established.

The Unit was formed as part of the Department of Trade in 1979. In 1983 it was transferred to the Department of Transport. The computerised finance system however only goes back as far as 1990 when the unit became part of Marine Emergencies Organisation. Records before this time are not readily available. The spend by the Marine Pollution Control Unit since 1990 is as follows:

1992/93: £7,420,454

1993/94: £7,172,959

1995/96: £7,733,406.

These figures include spend on programme costs and running costs. In addition, the MPCU incurred the following costs dealing with pollution incidents:

1990/91: £737,822

1992/93: £1,114,020

1993/94: £1,934,090

1995/96: £2,004,872.

Diesel Vehicles

Sir Graham Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the advantages of introducing incentives to promote the retro-fitting of emission control devices to diesel vehicles. [3791]

Mr. Bowis: We keep the position under review, taking account of relevant research such as analysis undertaken in the EU auto-oils programme, trials by London Transport buses and related research.

Office of Passenger Rail Franchising

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the latest estimated outturn costs to the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising, including incentive payments for paying (a) franchised and (b) non-franchised train operators, for the year 1996–97; what was the original budget; and what estimates he has made for subsequent years. [4150]

Mr. Watts: Opraf's original budget for support for passenger rail services provided for the franchise payments to Great Western and South West Trains of £125 million and a budget for BR of £1,692 million, making a total of £1,817 million against the £1,626 million voted in the main supply estimates. The latest estimated outturn is £1,763 million and a winter supplementary estimate for a further £137 million has been announced. The reduction of £54 million against the initial budget is the result of the savings on the 11 franchises let this year and the anticipated savings from later franchises. The split is estimated at payments to BR of £1,329 million and to franchisees of £434 million. The exact outturn will depend on the commencement dates of the later franchises and the savings achieved. Estimates for future years are being discussed in the public expenditure survey and announcements will be made at the usual time.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimated outturn of the cost of running the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising for the year 1996–97; what was the original budget, excluding payments to franchised and non-franchised train operators; and what are his latest estimates for subsequent years. [4149]

Mr. Watts: The latest estimated outturn for Opraf's running costs for 1996–97 is £7.556 million, which is the amount voted in the supply estimates. The estimates for 1997–98 and 1998–99 remain those in table 7 of the "Transport Report 1996", Cm 3206 page 85.

Shoreditch to New Cross Underground Line

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the planned timetable for completion of refurbishment work on the Shoreditch to New Cross/New Cross Gate underground line; what was the original timetable; when the line will reopen; and if he will make a statement. [3869]

Mr. Bowis: I understand that London Underground's refurbishment and tunnel strengthening works on the East London line are well under way and that London Underground is aiming to complete the works and re-commission the line in time to re-open it in late summer 1997. The works were originally programmed to take place between March and October 1995. They are now proceeding on schedule.

British Rail Budget

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimate of the outturn of the British Railways Board for the year 1996–97; what was the original budget; what is his latest estimate of expenditure in subsequent years; and what plans he has to finance any budgetary shortfall. [4152]

Mr. Watts: British Rail's budget for 1996–97 is currently under review in the light of the faster-than-expected progress made with privatisation. Estimates of expenditure in subsequent years, and plans to finance any budgetary shortfall, will be announced after the Chancellor's Budget statement on 26 November 1996.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what loans were made to the British Railways Board in the years 1990–91, 1991–92, 1992–93 and 1993–94; and how the expenditure funded by these loans was divided between domestic railway services and expenditure in connection with channel tunnel services. [4148]

Mr. Watts: Long-term loans from the national loans fund were made to the board as set out;

1991–92: £850 million

1993–94: £625 million.

No long-term loans were obtained by the board in those years other than from the NLF. Such loans are not hypothecated to specific investment but are provided to finance the borrower's overall capital requirements, which included substantial investment related to channel tunnel services in that period.

Office of the Rail Regulator

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the latest estimated outturn of the cost of running the Office of the Rail Regulator for the year 1996–97; what was the original budget; and what estimates he has made for later years. [4146]

Mr. Watts: I am advised by the Office of the Rail Regulator that the latest estimated outturn of the cost of running the office for 1996–97 is in line with the original budget, details of which are set out in the table. I will write to the hon. Member after the Chancellor's Budget statement on 26 November 1996 with estimates of expenditure plans in subsequent years, and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

	1996–97 original estimate and forecast outturn £ million
Running costs	7.8
Capital costs	0.4
	8.2

Passenger Transport Executives (Finance)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the total payments made in respect of railway passenger services made by central Government through the seven passenger transport executives for 1996-97; what was the original budget; and what are his latest estimates for subsequent years. [4151]

Mr. Watts: Metropolitan district councils in England receive recognition of the costs of PTE support for railway passenger services payments. This is included within the calculation of revenue support grant. The support given in this way—and its Scottish equivalent—amounts to £281.2 million for 1996–97. Railway passenger services in those areas also benefit from expenditure funded by payments under the terms of the deeds of assumption. Support for these rail services in later years has not yet been determined.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Tuberculosis

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the membership of the independent scientific review into the policy on tuberculosis and badgers which he announced on 23 July. [4497]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am pleased to be able to announce the membership of the independent review team on tuberculosis and badgers. Apart from Professor Krebs, who has already kindly agreed to chair the review, the members are Professor Roy Anderson FRS, Dr. W. I. Morrison, Professor Douglas Young, Professor Tim Clutton-Brock FRS and Dr. Crystl Donnelly.

The review will look at the incidence of tuberculosis, in cattle and badgers and assess the scientific evidence for the links between them. It will take account of EC policies on reducing and eliminating the incidence of tuberculosis in cattle and of any risk to the human population. Its overall purpose will be to review, in the light of scientific evidence, present Government policy on badgers and tuberculosis and to make recommendations.

The review is now beginning. Interested parties who wish to submit written evidence to the committee are invited to do so before 15 January 1997.

Hybrid Wolves

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hybrid wolves have been imported into the United Kingdom in each of the last five years. [3654]

Mr. Clappison: I have been asked to reply.

Import permits from the Department of the Environment are required only for those species of wolves listed in the appendices to the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora—CITES. Hybrid wolves are covered by the controls if one of the parents is a listed species. The Department's records indicate that in the last five years no CITES import licences have been granted for hybrid wolves.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union (Labour Conditions)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of (a) the average weekly working time and (b) the sickness and fatality rates of (i) European Commissioners, (ii) senior Commission officials and (iii) Members of the European Parliament. [4109]

Mr. David Davis: None. We do not recognise working time as being a genuine health and safety issue.

Turkey

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps have been taken in the European Union concerning the abuses of human rights in Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [3214]

Mr. David Davis: The European Union maintains a dialogue with Turkey on political issues, including human rights. The Council of Ministers has urged the Turkish Government to make further progress in this area. Concern about Turkey's human rights situation was expressed in the European Commission's October report on the customs union and a European Parliament resolution on 19 September.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to Turkey concerning recent killings in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement. [3215]

Mr. Davis: We have made it clear to the Turkish Government that we condemn the disproportionate use of force by security forces in the north of Cyprus, which has resulted in the tragic deaths of unarmed civilians along the ceasefire line. These incidents reinforce the importance of UN efforts to secure agreements on demanning, unloading and rules of conduct along the ceasefire lines.

Venezuela

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British citizens are currently held in detention in Venezuela. [4212]

Dr. Liam Fox: There are three British citizens currently held in detention in Venezuela. There is also a Commonwealth citizen for whom we have consular responsibility.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Venezuela. [4214]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Bilateral relations are good. There is substantial UK interest in trade and investment in Venezuela. I was there in May and the Venezuelan Planning Minister and Finance Minister visited London in September and October respectively.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the charges made against Mr. Paul Loseby and Mr. James Miles who are currently being held in Venezuela. [4209]

Dr. Fox: Mr. Paul Loseby and Mr. James Miles were arrested at Caracas airport on 4 November with cocaine strapped to their bodies.

The public prosecutor will decide whether any formal charges will be made.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to visit Venezuela. [4213]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to visit Venezuela. I visited in May and met several senior Venezuelan Ministers, including the President.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date and at what time the embassy in Caracas was informed of the arrest of Mr. Paul Loseby and Mr. James Miles; and for how many hours and on what days Mr. Loseby and Mr. Miles have been visited by consular officials. [4211]

Dr. Fox: The Venezuelan authorities told embassy officials in Caracas at about 11.00 hours on 6 November 1996 that two unnamed British nationals had been arrested. The same day, consular officials sought permission to visit, and were allowed to see Mr. Loseby and Mr. Miles at 15.00 hours on 7 November. The visit lasted about one hour.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Venezuelan authorities about the situation of British citizens currently being detained in Venezuela. [4215]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The British embassy in Caracas liaises regularly with the Venezuelan authorities and monitors closely the situation of all British citizens who have been detained. An EU demarche was made in July on the situation of the Venezuelan prisons and a statement was issued earlier this month by the EU presidency, following recent disturbances at the La Planta prison in Caracas.

TREASURY

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will publish the proposed rules on excessive deficits in respect of EMU; and if he will make a statement on the methods for achieving and monitoring compliance with these rules; [3553]

(2) what proposals have been put to the Council of Ministers to include amendments to article 104(b) among those matters to which decision by a majority vote would apply; [3557]

(3) if he will publish the latest proposals for a stability pact in respect of EMU; and if he will make a statement on the methods for achieving and monitoring compliance with the terms of the pact. [3554]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Rules on excessive deficits in respect of EMU and the methods for achieving and monitoring compliance with them are set out in article 104c of the Maastricht treaty. A stability pact has been proposed to clarify the practical application of these provisions. I submitted an explanatory memorandum to Parliament on the Commission's proposals for a stability pact on 31 October. The purpose of the excessive deficits procedure and the stability pact is to ensure that member states participating in EMU do not follow irresponsible fiscal policies which could affect exchange rates and drive up interest rates for other member states. Under the UK's opt-out, paragraphs 1, 9, and 11 of article 104c would not apply to the UK if the UK were to decide not to participate in stage 3 of EMU.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers will be available to (a) the European Monetary Institute and (b) a future European central bank to prevent the contravention of the no bail-out provisions of article 104(b) where such a bail-out is supported by (i) a majority of and (ii) all EU member states. [3555]

Mr. Clarke: Contraventions of any part of the treaty establishing the European Community, including the no bail-out clause—article 104b—are a matter for the European Court of Justice, not for the European Monetary Institute nor for a future European Central bank.

The excessive deficits procedure in article 104c, reinforced by the proposed stability pact, is designed to ensure that member states participating in EMU act in a fiscally responsible way and should help to prevent the issue of bail-out from arising.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provisions exist for the variation of the rules for excessive debt in respect of EMU (a) generally and (b) specifically in relation to unfunded pension liabilities. [3551]

Mr. Clarke: The rules on excessive debt in respect of EMU are set-out in article 104c of the Maastricht treaty. Paragraph 2 of that article makes clear how excessive debt shall be treated. Protocol (No.5) of this treaty explains how debt is defined and gives its reference value. This definition includes any debt incurred as a result of expenditure arising from pensions liabilities.

Unfunded Pension Liabilities

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the possible impact on (a) the United Kingdom (i) if it does and (ii) if it does not participate in the EMU and (b) the proposed euro currency of the falling due for payment of currently unfunded pension fund liabilities among European member states which participate in EMU. [3550]

Mr. Clarke: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks) on 6 November, Official Report, columns 354–46.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the latest estimate of unfunded pension liabilities published by the International Monetary Fund. [3549]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The IMF figures show that, in relation to unfunded pensions liabilities, the UK is in a stronger position than many other leading industrial countries. All estimates of unfunded pension liabilities depend upon a number of assumptions concerning pension entitlement and contribution rates and demographic and economic trends over future decades.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what (a) published and (b) unpublished decisions have been made of European Finance Ministers in relation to the operation of article 104(b) and unfunded pension liabilities; [3547]

(2) if he will list the meetings of European Finance Ministers at which the operation of article 104(b) in relation to unfunded pension liabilities has been discussed; [3546]

(3) what discussions have been held by (a) civil servants and (b) ministers with their counterparts in the European Union in relation to European Union member states' unfunded pension liabilities; [3548]

(4) what provisions the proposed stability pact in respect of EMU includes specifically on the treatment of unfunded pension liabilities. [3552]

Mr. Clarke: Parliament has been kept informed of discussions by European Finance Ministers in relation to the operation of article 104c. The most recent explanatory memorandum, on the Commission's proposals for a stability pact, was submitted to Parliament on 31 October.

Since November 1995, the proposed stability pact has been discussed on several occasions by the Council of European Finance Ministers, most recently on 11 November 1996. It aims to reinforce the operation of the excessive deficits procedure in EMU as set out in article 104c. Its purpose is to ensure that member states participating in EMU do not follow irresponsible fiscal policies. It is designed to ensure that if a member state needs to address the consequences of a build-up of liabilities of any kind it will not be able to fund them through excessive borrowing. This applies to all forms of liabilities, including pensions liabilities.

The UK and other member states provided the European Commission with information on pensions schemes earlier this year, and the issue of pensions liabilities will form part of the work programme of the economic policy committee over the next six months.

French Annual Deficit

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations Her Majesty's Government made in respect of the recent decision of Eurostat to allow the inclusion in the French Government's accounts of France Telecom's proposed pension payment to the French Exchequer in calculating the French annual deficit in 1997 or 1998. [3556]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Eurostat consulted the Committee on Monetary, Financial and Balance of Payments Statistics. The United Kingdom is represented on this committee by the Office for National Statistics and the Bank of England. Other member states are also represented by their national statistical offices and central banks.

EC (Government Debt)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further information he has evaluated in relation to European member states' unfunded liabilities and debt since his predecessor's answers of 26 November 1991, Official Report, column 446, in relation to (a) EC Government debt and (b) single currency. [3763]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: European member states regularly publish information on their Government debt. In accordance with standard internationally accepted definitions, these figures do not take account of unfunded liabilities. OECD and IMF calculations published in the last two years and based on a number of assumptions show that the UK is in a stronger position than many other leading industrial countries in relation to unfunded pension liabilities.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total value of payments made to EDS Ltd. since 1993 in relation to the provision of information technology services to the Inland Revenue. [2420]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 5 November 1996]: The total value of payments made to EDS Ltd. for information technology services amounts to £356.7 million exclusive of VAT. In addition, the Department has paid £59.4 million for the use of the assets transferred when the contract started on 1 July 1994 and for the use of additional hardware purchased since that date.

Unemployment Statistics

Ms Church: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people (a) in total and (b) in the age bands (i) 16 to 24 years, (ii) 25 to 34 years, (iii) 35 to 44 years, (iv) 45 to 54 years, (v) 55 to 64 years and (vi) 65 years and over, have experienced (1) two, (2) three, (3) four and (4) five spells of unemployment, since 1992 in the United Kingdom; and if he will give the figures as a percentage of the economically active work force in the relevant age band. [1913]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms. Judith Church dated 14 November 1996;

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many people have experienced two, three, four and five spells of unemployment, since 1992 in the United Kingdom, by age.

The available data are shown in the following table. Data are only available for Great Britain.

Number of people in Great Britain who have experienced at least one spell of claimant unemployment since January 1992, by number of spells experienced

Number of spells of unemployment

Great Britain.

It is not possible to calculate proportions as a percentage of the economically active workforce because the corresponding number of people who have never been economically active over the period is not known—only point in time estimates of the latter are available.

Tax Changes

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his timetable for (a) the abolition of (i) capital gains tax and (ii) inheritance tax, and (b) implementing a standard rate of tax at 20p in the pound; and if he will make a statement. [3245]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The Government remain committed to the long-term aims of abolishing capital gains tax and inheritance tax, and reducing the basic rate of income tax to 20 per cent., as and when resources permit.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the number and percentage of economically inactive (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) people of working age in the United Kingdom and for each region in (a) 1981, (b) 1991 and (c) 1996, indicating the percentage changes since 1981; [2810]

(2) what are the latest figures for the number and percentage of economically inactive (a) men and (b) people of working age for (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) each region aged (1) 16 to 24, (2) 25 to 34, (3) 35 to 49 and (4) 50 to 64 years; [2811]

(3) what are the latest figures for the number and percentage of economically inactive (a) women and (b) men of working age for the United Kingdom and for each region aged (i) 16 to 24, (ii) 25 to 34, (iii) 35 to 49 and (iv) 50 to 59 years. [2813]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 14 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to rely as the Director of the Office for National Statistics on your recent questions (2810, 2811 and 2813) on various breakdowns of the economically inactive of working age by region.

The information is available from the Labour Force Survey database which can be accessed by the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what percentage of economically inactive (a) men and (b) women of working age are classed as (i) sick, (ii) disabled and (iii) voluntary retirees; [2812]

(2) what percentage of economically inactive people of working age are classed as (a) sick, (b) disabled and (c) voluntary retirees. [2814]

Mrs. Knight [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 14 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics on your recent questions (2812 and 2814) on the numbers of economically inactive of working age who are sick, disabled or retired.

The available information is shown in the table.

Economically inactive people of working age[1] by gender and reason for inactivity (Great Britain, Spring 1996)

Reason for inactivity (as percentage of all inactive)

	All economically inactive[2]	Temporarily sick or injured	Long-term sick or disabled	Retired	Other
Total	7,491	2.9	26.2	5.9	65.1
Men	2,765	3.8	40.7	11.0	44.5
Women	4,727	2.3	17.7	2.9	77.1

Note:
[1] Working age is defined as 16–64 for men and 16–59 for women.

Taxation (Self-assessment)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if self-assessed taxpayers who are selected for random audit in 1997–98 will be told that they are being investigated for purely statistical reasons; [3111]

(2) how many random audits his Department plans to carry out in 1997–98 under self-assessment power S9A TMA 1970. [3112]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: No tax returns will be selected for inquiry purely for statistical reasons.

Most returns will be selected on the basis of an identified tax risk, but the Inland Revenue proposes to select approximately 10,000 tax returns for inquiry on a random basis during 1997–98, that is about 0.1 per cent. of all self-assessment returns. First and foremost, random inquiries will help to deter would-be tax evaders, who believe they might otherwise successfully cover their tracks and so avoid selection for inquiry. They will also help the Department to identify new areas of high risk and indicate levels of compliance.

The Inland Revenue will not tell any taxpayer the basis on which his return has been chosen for inquiry, since to do so would undermine the effectiveness of this new power and could introduce unnecessary confrontation into inquiry work.

The Inland Revenue aims for high standards in its inquiry work and has published a new code of practice 11—"Enquiries into tax returns by local Tax offices"—explaining how this will be conducted under self-assessment.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Inland Revenue is taking to ensure that queries about the self-assessment system are dealt with speedily. [3255]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The Inland Revenue will seek to achieve the published standards of customer service for 1996–97 for all taxpayers including those affected by self-assessment.

The capacity of tax inquiry centres and switchboards has been reviewed and where appropriate enhanced. A helpline has been established to assist taxpayers outside normal working hours.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff the Inland Revenue had (a) in 1994 and (b) in each subsequent year; and what increases in staffing there will be to cover the period of the introduction of self-assessment. [3322]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]:

(a) At 1 April 1994 the Inland Revenue, excluding the Valuation Office Agency, had 58,569 staff in post;

(b) The numbers for subsequent years are:

April: 54,562

April: 52,150

There will be no increase in staff numbers to cover the introduction of self-assessment, but measures have been taken to ensure that a higher level of customer service is available in a number of ways to help with any queries which may arise during the introductory period.

Taxation Letters

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many letters the Inland Revenue has received (a) in total and (b) from self-employed people in each quarter during the last five years. [3253]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The Inland Revenue does not currently disaggregate information on post volumes by origin or type of post. The table shows quarterly volumes of post received since April 1993. Earlier figures are obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

Year		Total volume of post received [1]
1993–94	First quarter	33,133,062
	Second quarter	32,755,151
	Third quarter	33,124,631
	Fourth quarter	31,089,124
1994–95	First quarter	35,665,814
	Second quarter	32,394,943
	Third quarter	33,332,228
	Fourth quarter	29,986,006
1995–96	First quarter	29,807,052
	Second quarter	29,388,557
	Third quarter	31,992,414
	Fourth quarter	29,480,783
1996–97	First quarter	29,149,287
	Second quarter	26,991,811

[1] Figures are for Inland Revenue regional executive offices responsible for assessing and collecting income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax.

Inland Revenue (Letters)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average time the Inland Revenue took to answer letters (a) in 1979 and (b) in each subsequent year. [3260]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The Inland Revenue does not collect information on average response times. Instead, it measures performance against its customer service standard of replying to all types of post within 28 days. These customer service results are published annually in the board of Inland Revenue report, copies of which are in the House of Commons Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Company Directors

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received asking him to make it a criminal offence for a director of a company knowingly to make untrue statements about a competitor company to an hon. Member, a Member of the House of Lords or a Member of the European Parliament; if he will consider such a proposal; and if he will make a statement. [3530]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have received no such representations. Any person, whether or not a director of a company, must already have regard in any statement about a third party which he or she may make to a Member of Parliament to the application of the law of defamation to the statement in any circumstances outside the scope of the strict rules of absolute parliamentary privilege.

Employment Agencies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make an assessment of the applicability of those sections of the Employment Act 1973 covering employment agencies to the activities of international executive search agencies operating in the United Kingdom. [3776]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The applicability of the Employment Agencies Act 1973 and associated regulations to the activities of international executive search agencies is a matter to be assessed by my Department on a case-by-case basis.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the report of the nuclear installations inspectorate on safety at Dounreay; what contamination of the site and of staff is reported; what improvement notices have been served; what staff reductions there have been over the past 12 months; what private contractors are currently working on the site and what work each is undertaking; if he will now review his privatisation programme; and if he will make a statement. [3656]

Mr. Page: I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive HSE that it has not produced such a report, but it served two improvement notices on Dounreay in 1995 and a further two notices last month. Details of changes in staff numbers and of the work being undertaken on the site by private contractors are operational matters for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority. The UKAEA will keep the use of commercial contractors under review to ensure that they continue to contribute to the safe and cost-effective management of the Dounreay site.

Salaries (Publication)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to require companies to publish annually the salaries paid to their highest and lowest paid staff. [2036]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 13 November 1996]: I have no plans to require companies to publish this information.

Companies are already required to disclose certain information about the remuneration of their employees and of their directors. In many cases this includes a requirement to disclose the remuneration of the highest-paid director.

Consumer Protection (Computer Software)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about consumer protection in respect of computer software. [3265]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 13 November 1996]: Consumers buying packaged computer software enjoy the same statutory rights under the Sale of Goods Act 1979 as when buying any other type of good. However, if the hon. Member has any specific concerns about computer protection in respect of computer software, he may wish to write to me with them.

Launch Aid

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those companies which have received launch aid in each year since 1979 and the level of support given. [3694]

Mr. Greg Knight [holding answer 13 November 1996]: The information is as follows, in £ million:

	Westland Helicopters Ltd.	British Aerospace plc	Short Brothers plc	Rolls-Royce (1971) Ltd. and Rolls-Royce plc

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the launch aid receipts for each year from 1979. [3693]

Mr. Knight [holding answer 13 November 1996]: The information is as follows , in £ million:

1980–81: 9.9
1981–82: 9.3
1982–83: 11.4
1983–84: 9.2
1984–85: 11.8
1985–86: 16.4
1986–87: 24.5

1991–92: 83.0
1992–93: 75.7
1993–94: 55.3
1995–96: 51.7.

The total amount of launch aid levy receipts recorded by my Department for the financial years 1961–62 to 1995–96 inclusive is £602.7 million, not £597.7 million as previously published in my answer to the hon. Member on 30 October 1996, Official Report, column 152.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what level of support was paid to the aerospace industry under the launch aid programme in each year since 1979. [3692]

Mr. Knight [holding answer 13 November 1996]: The information is as follows, in £ million:

1979–80: 75.4
1980–81: 67.1
1981–82: 92.6
1982–83: 63.5

1990–91: 141.1
1991–92: 78.6
1992–93: 31.4
1993–94: 0.6
1995–96: 16.4.

The total amount of launch aid recorded by my Department as having been allocated towards civil aeronautics projects between the 1961–62 and 1995–96 financial years is £1,532.4 million, not £968.1 million as previously published in my answer to the hon. Member on 30 October 1996, Official Report, column 152.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many firms data have been inputted on to the Department's small business data. [4158]

Mr. Page: The Department does not keep a database of small businesses.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of UK small and medium-sized firms export; what are the equivalent figures in each EU country; and what is the EU average. [4157]

Mr. Page: Data on the percentage of small and medium-sized firms that export are not collected, either for the United Kingdom or for other EU countries.

Business Angel Scheme

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the results of the pilot scheme on a business angel introduction scheme at five training and enterprise councils. [4131]

Mr. Page: The five informal investment demonstration projects, for which the Government provided pump-priming funding, were very successful both in terms of the number of investors registered and the number of investments made in local businesses. They also succeeded in raising the profile of informal investment among owners of businesses and potential investors.

The five TEC-based business introduction services continue to operate alongside those run by a wide variety of other organisations, including a number of business links.

Airline Alliance

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those airlines which his Department has consulted on the British Airways-American Airlines proposed alliance since his receipt of the report by the Office of Fair Trading. [3871]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department of Trade and Industry has received correspondence from Virgin Atlantic, Trans World Airlines, United Airlines, British Airways and Continental Airlines since receipt of the Director General of Fair Trading's advice.

My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has yet to take his decision on this case. It is not the Department's practice to consult interested parties during the period between receipt of the director general's report and the president's decision.

Third parties had the opportunity to make their views known to the director general and these were included in his advice to my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

SCOTLAND

Prescribed Drugs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many elderly (a) men and (b) women have been admitted to hospital as a consequence of an adverse reaction to (i) non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, (ii) phenothiazines, (iii) diuretics, (iv) analgesics, (v) night sedation, (vi) digoxin, (vii) laxatives, (viii) corticosteroids, (ix) beta blockers and (x) aminophylline, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [2902]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is shown in the table. It is not possible separately to identify the individual drugs listed. The answer shows classes of drugs, which include those listed.

Planning Guidelines

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what evaluation his Department has made of the capacity of the planning system to absorb a new (a) low-impact and (b) permaculture use class into existing guidelines; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of this policy; [3367]

(2) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated into the advantages of establishing a permaculture use class within the planning system; and if he will make a statement. [3377]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Office has not planned, commissioned or evaluated any research on the subject of low-impact or permaculture use classes. The existing use classes, set out in the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes) (Scotland) Order 1989, are based on the actual use of buildings or land. Each class is made up of uses which are similar in nature and in their impacts on the environment and amenity. Their purpose is to determine whether a change of use requiring planning consent has taken place. Introducing new use classes based only on environmental impacts would not be practicable as they would be incompatible with existing use classes and other planning legislation. Environmental impacts are material considerations to be taken into account in determining individual planning applications.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment his Department had made of the capacity of the planning system to accommodate low-impact development; and if he will make a statement; [3356]

(2) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated into establishing practical criteria for assessing sustainable and low-impact developments, with particular regard to rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [3268]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Office has not planned, commissioned or evaluated any research specifically on the subject of assessing sustainable and low-impact developments. However, the Scottish Office provides a range of guidance, advice and support designed to encourage sustainable development in rural areas which benefits local residents. The planning system is designed to be flexible enough to assess and accommodate all types of development. Each planning application is considered on its own merits, taking account of all material considerations which apply in that particular case.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment has been made of the effects of European monetary union on the Scottish economy; and what preparations have been taken in respect of such effects. [1532]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 31 October 1996]: I have been asked to reply.

An assessment of the implications for the whole of the United Kingdom of the European single currency will be made nearer the time. At this stage sufficient information to carry out a full assessment is not available. There are still many unknowns and uncertainties, including which countries are likely to meet the conditions for joining and how much convergence will have been achieved.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will introduce a wider system of concessionary television licences for people in (a) sheltered accommodation and (b) elsewhere; and if she will make a statement. [3770]

Mr. Sproat: During the passage of the Broadcasting Act 1996, the Government undertook to address the situation arising when the residents of a sheltered housing scheme which meets all other qualifying criteria fail to qualify for concessionary licences because a small number of units within the scheme were purchased under the right to buy provisions before the accommodation was designated as sheltered housing. We hope to lay new consolidated television licensing regulations before the end of the year, and they will address this anomaly. There are no plans to extend any further the availability of concessionary television licences. As stated in the 1994 White Paper, "The Future of the BBC", Cm. 2621, the Government believe that the right way to help the less well off, of all ages, is through the welfare and benefit systems.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many contracts her Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if she will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if she will make a statement on the number of job reductions in her Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3813]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage was established on 13 April 1992 and The Royal Parks agency was established on 1 April 1993. Since those dates, the Department and its agencies have not let any contracts to EDS.

Football Grounds

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what is her policy in respect of premiership football clubs whose grounds need major work to bring them up to the standards of the Taylor report; [3685]

(2) what estimate she has made of the costs to premiership football clubs of major works required to bring their grounds up to the standards of the Taylor report. [3686]

Mr. Sproat: Premiership football clubs were required to meet the all-seater recommendations in the Taylor report by August 1994. All clubs in the premiership, except Sunderland, now meet these requirements. Sunderland was granted an extension to relocate to a new all-seater stadium in time for the start of next season.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Tax

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the Band D council tax precepts for all districts in Somerset, Devon, Wiltshire and Dorset in 1995–96 and 1996–97 and the percentage change, and (b) the same information for each other district in England where the band D increase was higher than 10 per cent. [3531]

Sir Paul Beresford: The basic amount of council tax set by a shire district for district level services comprises the district's own council tax requirement and those of parish councils within its area. The basic amount and the amounts accounted for by the parish precepts are shown in the table below. These amounts are added to the county council and the shire police precepts to form the band D council tax for each district's area.

A table showing information for all other districts in England where the band D increase in council tax for district level services was higher than 10 per cent., has today been placed in the Library of the House.

Regional Development Funding

Sir Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those applications from Cornwall and Devon that have given approval for European regional development fund objective 5b funding, indicating the financial amounts approved and the total cost of each project; how many applications have been submitted hitherto but refused; how many applications are currently being considered; and what is the total finance involved. [3455]

Sir Paul Beresford: I am today placing copies of the information in the Library of the House.

Hybrid Wolves

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what advice his Department has issued to local authorities on the subject of hybrid wolves; what plans he has to issue further advice; and what requests his Department has received for such guidance; [3652]

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's definition of a hybrid wolf for the purposes of licensing. [3653]

Mr. Clappison: The Department has received requests for guidance on hybrid wolves from the following local authorities: Bassetlaw district council, Birmingham city council, Broxtowe borough council, Newark and Sherwood district council; Rotherham metropolitan borough council; South Cambridgeshire district council, the City of Wakefield metropolitan district council and Wolverhampton metropolitan borough council.

Under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976, a licence to keep a wolf is required from the local authority. A licence is also required to keep any hybrid where one parent is—or both parents are—of a kind specified in the schedule to the Act. The Department has so advised those local authorities seeking guidance. There are no plans to issue any further central guidance to local authorities.

Rents

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the level of rent paid by (a) private tenants and (b) recipients of housing benefit; and if he will make a statement. [3809]

Mr. Clappison: The 1995–96 survey of English housing estimated the average weekly rent of private tenants to be £70 per week. The average weekly rent for private tenants on housing benefit was the same. Assured tenants on benefit paid an average of £8 per week less than those who were not receiving benefit, but there were more benefit recipients in this sector. The table gives full details.

Rents and proportions of private tenants by type of tenancy: HB and non-HB

	Regulated	Assured and assured shorthold	Not accessible to the public (e.g. employer)	Resident landlord	All
Average rent					(£ a week)
HB recipients	39	79	—	45	70
Non-HB	40	87	34	44	69
All	39	84	34	44	70
Proportion in tenancy type					Per cent.
HB recipients	18	75	0	7	100
Non-HB	10	52	27	12	100
All	12	59	19	10	100

These figures are supported by other research for the Department, which found that when all other factors are held constant, private tenants receiving housing benefit do not pay significantly different rents from tenants who are not on housing benefit.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about unfair rents and rent capping in the last 12 months. [3810]

Mr. Clappison: We have received a wide range of representations. For example, landlords of regulated tenants argue that they should be freed from the controls of the Rent Act 1977 and allowed to charge market rents; tenants in the deregulated sector argue that full housing benefit should be available to support above average rents. We believe that the current legislation provides the right balance between the interests of landlords, tenants and the taxpayer.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Housing Corporation; and what was discussed. [3768]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration last met the chairman of Housing Corporation on 16 October to discuss various matters, including finances and board membership.

Housing Starts

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new housing starts there were in each year since 1976, broken down into (a) local authority housing, (b) housing association housing and (c) private housing; and if he will make a statement. [3808]

Mr. Clappison: Estimates of house building are shown in the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for 1976 to 1992 are in tables 6.1 of the annual editions covering the period from 1976 to 1986 through to the annual edition covering 1983 to 1993. The latest figures for 1993, 1994, 1995 and the first six months of 1996 are in the quarterly publication "Housing and Construction Statistics, Part 1—June 1996".

Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Housing Associations

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of housing associations; and what was discussed. [3767]

Mr. Clappison: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration last met the chairman and chief executive of the National Housing Federation on 18 September at a reception to mark the raising of £10 billion of private finance for housing associations since the Housing Act 1988.

Homelessness

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of homelessness charities to discuss projects for the homeless. [3769]

Mr. Clappison: On 31 October, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration met representatives from CHAR, Crisis, Homeless Network and Shelter to discuss the Government's proposals to provide further help to tackle rough sleeping, building on the success of the rough sleepers initiative. Those proposals were set out in my right hon. Friend's answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 31 October, Official Report, column 187. These voluntary sector agencies, and Centrepoint, have indicated their willingness to work nationally with Government Departments, local authorities and other agencies to help ensure that there is no necessity for people to sleep rough.

British Waterways

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the privatisation of British Waterways. [3870]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have no plans to privatise British Waterways.

Business Rates

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's estimate of the number of sports clubs which pay business rates on their premises. [4142]

Mr. Curry: My Department estimates that about 10,000 sports clubs are liable for rates in England. Many will have their bills reduced or remitted in full by local authorities using their discretionary powers.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of business rates paid in the last year for which figures are available on sporting rights relate to (a) shooting, (b) fly fishing and (c) coarse fishing. [4141]

Mr. Curry: The information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the representations he received asking for the abolition of the business rate on sporting rights showing the name of the organisation or individual requesting such abolition and the date such representations were received by his Department; [4143]

(2) if he will list the representations he received asking for the abolition or reduction of the business rate on sports club premises, showing the name of the organisation or individual requesting such abolition and the date such representations were received by his Deaprtmetn. [4144]

Mr. Curry: I have received a number of representations over the past three years. I will write to the hon. Member with further details in due course.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a list indicating for each local authority area the amount received from business rates on sporting rights. [4140]

Mr. Curry: The information requested is not held centrally. There are about 6,000 sporting rights in England. We estimate that local authorities receive less than £5 million in respect of rates on those hereditaments.

Development Land, Bedfordshire

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he called in proposals for development of land near the village of Henlow, Bedfordshire. [4210]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have decided to call in this proposal for industrial and commercial development on a former sand and gravel pit. The decision was issued today.

Environment Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the annual report and accounts of the Environment Agency 1995–96. [4080]

Mr. Clappison: The financial statements in the Environment Agency's annual report and accounts for 1995–96 were audited by auditors appointed by the Secretary of State. We are satisfied from the auditors' report that the funds of the agency were properly and well managed. The Secretary of State laid the annual report and accounts before Parliament in July 1996.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in relation to the implications of the Lappel bank judgment of the European Court of Justice for (a) the Cardiff bay barrage and (b) other wetland schemes with present or previous conservation protection; and if he will make a statement. [4134]

Mr. Clappison: The Secretary of State has received one representation about the implications of the Lappel bank judgment for the Cardiff bay barrage. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales informed the hon. Member on 18 July, Official Report, column 643, the European Commission has accepted the Government's position on the construction of the Cardiff bay barrage. We have had no representations about other wetland schemes.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had in 1996 with non-governmental groups on the protection of sites of special scientific interest. [4081]

Mr. Clappison: There is effective dialogue across a range of environmental issues with non-governmental groups, but Ministers in my Department have not consulted them specifically in 1996 about the protection of sites of special scientific interest.

Information Flows

Mr. Deva: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to publish the outcome of his recent efficiency scrutiny into information flows between central and local government; and if he will make a statement. [4499]

Mr. Curry: I have today published for consultation the report of an efficiency scrutiny into information flows between central and local government in England.

I am determined to cut the burden of paperwork generated by the demands for information from local government. This report makes a number of challenging recommendations for both central and local government which aim to cut the paper flow by up to one third, making savings of £8 million to £10 million a year, as well as delivering improvements in the accuracy and value of the information.

We will look carefully at the report's recommendations and, following consultation with local government, prepare, and publish in the new year, an action plan for implementing the report. As the report recognises, improvements are already happening. Today's publication will give a welcome boost to that work.

I am today writing to the chairmen of the local authority associations inviting their comments on the report's recommendations, which we shall take into account in the preparation of the action plan. I am also inviting the associations to join a joint group with representatives of the main Whitehall Departments involved to oversee implementation of the action plan.

The key recommendations of the report cover:

Reducing the volume of data collected by cutting down the level of detail or the frequency with which information is collected, eliminating duplication and making greater use of sample surveys.

Improving the value and usefulness of data by standardising definitions, reviewing forms with those who have to complete them, and taking steps to improve understanding of: what is required, how the data will be used, and how the information provided relates to the quality and level of activity on the ground.

Further work or separate reviews in a number of areas, including specific grant regimes, fire and probation services, school building projects and grants for higher education.

Improving the arrangements for housing and transport capital programmes, and for European regional development fund and European social fund—ESF—grants, including greater delegation of responsibility in some areas to the Government offices for the regions.

I am arranging for copies of the report to be placed in the Library of the House. Copies are being sent to the local authority associations and to individual local authorities in England.

Housing Revenue Account

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue the draft housing revenue account subsidy and item 8 determinations for 1997–98. [4565]

Mr. Clappison: Local authorities have today been sent the draft housing revenue account subsidy and item 8 determinations for 1997–98. They have been invited to let my Department have their views by 6 December 1996.

We are proposing that the average guideline rent for 1997–98 should be £35.36 a week. It is only 73p per week more than this year's guideline rent. Guideline rent increases for individual authorities would range between 48p and 98p.

To encourage authorities to keep their rent increases within the guideline increase, we propose to continue with the present rule limiting rent rebate subsidy. This does not affect tenants' entitlement to housing benefit, but does provide authorities with a strong incentive to keep rent increases down to reasonable levels.

Total provision within the subsidy system for expenditure by authorities on management and maintenance in 1997–98 will be over £3.3 billion. This is about the same per dwelling as in the current financial year.

We believe that there is still scope for town hall housing departments to secure efficiency savings and reduce their spending. The opportunities are there. We would like to see authorities taking a hard look at their housing services and finding better and more efficient ways of delivering them. This might include, for example, the involvement of housing associations or others in the private sector in the delivery of services. Even modest economies would help tenants by keeping rent increases down.

Copies of the draft determinations have been placed in the House Library.

Housing Act 1996

Sir Jim Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to make an order to commence parts VI and VII of the Housing Act 1996. [4694]

Mr. Curry: I shall make the order to commence these provisions in England and Wales shortly. Part VII will commence on 20 January 1997. Part VI will commence on 1 April 1997; this will give local authorities additional time to set up effective new allocation schemes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions (Age Addition)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people, aged 80 years or above, are currently in receipt of an additional pension of 25p per week; how many of those people are currently in receipt of income support; how many of those people have their additional pension deducted in full from their income support; and if he will make a statement. [4137]

Mr. Roger Evans: It is estimated that 2,299,000 persons were eligible for the age addition as at September 1995. As at November 1995, 746,000 also received income support, either as the claimant or a partner, accounting for 700,000 benefit units. It is assumed that all of these persons will have the additional amount deducted in full from their income support.

Notes:

1. Numbers have been rounded to the nearest thousand.

2. Benefit units may be a single person or a couple. Either the claimant, their partner, or both claimant and partner may be in receipt to the age addition.

3. The data given assume that any person aged 80 or over receives the additional 25p per week, and that this amount is deducted from the person's income support in all cases.

4. Data refer to persons entitled to the additional amount. No data are available regarding numbers actually receiving the age addition.

5. Numbers include persons in residential care and nursing homes.

Source:

1. "Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry November 1995" (5 per cent. sample)

2. "Retirement Pension Biannual Enquiry" correct at 30 September 1995.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that the additional pension paid to those of 80 years and above be disregarded in full payment of income support. [4139]

Mr. Evans: No, we have no plans to introduce a disregard of the 25p age addition in the calculation of income support. Income support has a three-tier structure to reflect the increasing costs of older income support claimants. The pensioner premium is awarded automatically when a claimant reaches age 60, this is replaced by the enhanced pensioner premium at age 75 and the higher pensioner premium at age 80.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the net cost of increasing the additional pension paid to those aged 80 years or above by the rate of inflation since the additional pension was introduced; what would be the net cost of increasing the additional pension by that figure (a) by inflation plus £5 per week and (b) by inflation plus £10 per week; and if he will make a statement. [4154]

Mr. Heald: The net cost of increasing the 25p age addition in retirement pension by the rate of inflation since 1971 would be £100 million in 1996–97. The age addition itself would be £1.65 per week.

The net cost of increasing the age addition in 1996–97 by inflation since 1971 and an extra £5 a week would be £460 million.

The net cost of increasing the age addition in 1996–97 by inflation since 1971 and an extra £10 a week would be £850 million.

The Government are committed to focusing help on the most needy pensioners. We have increased the higher pensioner premium in the income support scheme, for the over-80s, by more than 40 per cent. since 1988. This premium is currently £25.15 for single pensioners and £35.95 for couples. Raising this premium is a better way of focusing help on pensioners with low incomes than increasing the 25p age addition for all pensioners, regardless of their individual needs.

Sources:

1. Estimates of the gross costs of contributory retirement pensions were provided by the Government actuary's department.

2. Estimates of the gross costs of non-contributory retirement pensions were based on the 1996 departmental report.

3. Estimates of net costs were calculated using the policy simulation model 1996–97, which is based upon data from the family expenditure surveys 1991, 1992 and 1993; uprated to 1996–97 prices, benefit rates and caseloads, consistent with the 1996 departmental report.

Capital and Income Limits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish for each benefit and each capital or income limit which was not increased in April 1996 (a) the reasons for not doing so and (b) the current value of each such benefit or limit and the value which would have resulted from increasing it in line with prices and average earnings when he announces the April 1997 uprating since it was (i) last increased or (ii) introduced. [4082]

Mr. Heald: No. The announcement of benefit rates from April 1997 will be in a similar format to previous years.

Unrest Abroad

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which countries have been notified to him by the Home Secretary since 12 October 1995 as having undergone a significant upheaval. [4084]

Mr. Roger Evans: None. I understand that no countries have been designated by the Home Secretary as having been subject to a significant upheaval since the mechanism was first introduced in February 1996.

Appeals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer on 4 November, Official Report, column 387, when he approved the current appeal form for the purposes of regulation 3(1) of the Social Security (Adjudication) Regulations 1995, as amended with effect from 21 October; [4086]

(2) what response he has made to the recommendation of the Council on Tribunals that, in the information supplied to people appealing to social security, disability and child support appeal tribunals, there should be an emphasis on the desirability of oral hearings; and what steps he has taken to implement that recommendation. [4083]

Mr. Roger Evans: The appeal form currently available was approved on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in February 1996, a copy of which is in the Library. The revised form, to be distributed next week, was similarly approved on 27 September. A copy will be placed in the Library. The Council on Tribunals was assured that we would make appellants aware of the consequences of not opting for an oral hearing. The current form encourages attendance by saying that appellants who attend do better than those who do not, and the tribunal wants to hear what the appellant has to say. The revised form will retain this message and make it more promirent.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to obtain the views of tribunal members on the questions raised in the consultation paper, "Improving Decision Making and Appeals in Social Security", Cm. 3328. [4087]

Mr. Evans: The president of the independent tribunal service who is responsible for all Social Security tribunals, including tribunals considering child support, medical and disability questions, and their members, was formally consulted on the Government's proposals contained in the Green Paper, "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security". The president in turn consulted his staff before responding to the Government's proposals and his response includes the views of tribunal members.

The president also invited his staff to respond directly if they wished and a number of tribunal members have responded separately to the Government's consultation. A total of 100 copies of the Green Paper and the Green Paper summary were sent to the ITS for internal distribution. That included copies sent direct to regional chairmen and full-time chairmen. Additional copies were also made available.

Child Support Regulations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what procedures have been put in place for monitoring the effects of the Social Security (Adjudication) and Child Support Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996. [4088]

Mr. Roger Evans: Existing statistical information, which is collected on a regular basis, will be supplemented by additional research over the coming months in order to evaluate the effects of these regulations.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will amend the Income Support (General) Regulations to make income support payable to asylum seekers at the full rate. [4085]

Mr. Roger Evans: No. Asylum seekers, entitled to benefit while their applications are considered, are paid at a reduced rate because of the temporary nature of their immigration status.

Century Date Change (Computers)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the cost effects of the millennium date change on the computer systems operated by his Department since his answer of 13 June, Official Report, column 261. [4101]

Mr. Burt: The Department has set up a central project to manage the effects of the year 2000 date change. Work is continuing and a full analysis of the problem and an initial estimate of costs is expected by the end of January 1997.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of local customer survey, undertaken by the Benefits Agency. [3351]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr David. Hinchliffe, dated 13 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will make a statement on the future of local customer surveys, undertaken by the Benefits Agency (BA).

District Managers, who are the local budget holders, have the responsibility for deciding whether to fund local customer surveys from within their existing budgets.

Local surveys assist managers in establishing customers' needs, so that resources and service provision are properly targeted. The results of these surveys also assists in the longer term planning process. Surveys give valuable immediate feedback on caller and telephone business, including highlighting peaks and troughs of performance, enabling managers to take steps to improve performance where needed. A further use of local customer surveys is to obtain feedback about proposed changes to business delivery.

Any BA Unit seeking to be successful in their application for a Chartermark award must conduct local customer surveys.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of review visits by the Benefits Agency. [3350]

Mr. Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 13 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will make a statement on the future of review visits by the Benefits Agency (BA).

Review visits are carried out as part of the BA's Targeted Review programme, although reviews may also be carried out by post or telephone. 1.2 million cases in total are expected to be reviewed this year (1996/97), by all three methods. Levels of activity for next year (1997/98) have not yet been decided.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Local Offices (Hampshire)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were in receipt of family credit in each Benefits Agency office in Hampshire in 1993 and in each subsequent year. [3353]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of family credit is a matter for Peter Mathison, chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Denham, dated 13 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people were in receipt of Family Credit (FC) in each Benefits Agency (BA) office in Hampshire in 1993 and in each subsequent year.

The information is not available in the format requested. Family Credit is administered centrally by the Family Credit Unit. As such, statistics are produced on a national basis. Statistics are available which provide the number of families in receipt of FC within a BA office area at a given date. However, this only serves as a "snap-shot" at that given date and does not provide details of the number of families in receipt of FC annually.

The details for offices within the Hampshire area are shown in the attached Annex. For your information, the most recent scan has also been included.

I hope you find this reply useful.

Benefits Agency (Emergency Services)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Benefits Agency offices provide out-of-hours services; and what proposals he has for the future of this provision. [3262]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. David Hinchliffe, dated 13 November 1996

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many Benefits Agency (BA) offices provide out-of hours-services; and what proposals he has for the future of this provision.

The Out of Hours Service (OOHS) is provided on an area basis rather than by individual BA offices and all 13 Area Directorates provide this service.

We are currently undertaking a review of the OOHS. A consultation exercise to assess the impact of a reduction or withdrawal of the OOHS was conducted during August and early September. The results of the exercise are now being evaluated and all issues will be considered before a decision on the future of the service is made. It is anticipated that this decision will be made by the end of the year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Job Seeker's Allowance

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions exist within the job seeker's allowance to aid job seekers hampered by the absence of suitable public transport to areas of potential employment. [4054]

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. J. L. Grover to Miss Emma Nicholson, dated 14 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question about what provisions exist within Jobseeker's Allowance to aid jobseekers hampered by the absence of public transport to areas of potential employment.

Travel to work arrangements and costs are a matter for individuals and their employer. There is no provision under Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) to cover such costs.

However, we have been running the Travel to Interview Scheme for a number of years to help unemployed people cope with the expense of getting to job interviews. The scheme does this by helping people who have been unemployed more than 13 weeks with travelling costs, and if necessary, overnight accommodation costs to attend job interviews outside their usual travel to work area. A few simple conditions must be met before assistance can be granted, to ensure the scheme is properly and fairly administered and gives good value for money. In the last year the scheme has helped nearly 47,000 applicants with travelling costs totalling £1.7m.

I hope this is helpful.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3812]

Mr. Willetts: The information requested is not available before 1990. Since 1990, the Cabinet Office (Office of Public Service), its agencies and associated bodies have had two contracts with EDS. The first contract was worth £2,744 and (a) is completed, (b) no modifications were made, and (c) no work was undertaken under contract in-house. The second has no guaranteed value and (a) is on-going, (b) no modifications to date have been made at the request of either the company or the Department, and (c) no work is undertaken under contract in-house. Neither contract has resulted in job reductions in the Department.

Government Policy Co-ordination

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of his departmental costs is attributable to the co-ordination of Government policy. [1309]

Mr. Willetts: The co-ordination of Government policy is a ministerial activity. No costs are incurred in specifically supporting my right hon. Friend in this area.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate Her Majesty's Government have made of the cost of implementation of the working time directive for central Government employees; and what is his most recent calculation of the cost of implementing the rules governing the 48-hour working week for central Government employees. [4089]

Mr. Freeman: The cost of implementing the provisions of the EU working time directive for central Government as a whole has not been calculated. In the main, civil servants have terms and conditions of employment, and work hours, which do not conflict with the provisions of the directive. It is for individual Departments and agencies to assess the effects in their own areas.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what are the latest estimates of the expenditure on external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1996 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in. [4066]

Mr. Willetts: This answer refers to expenditure by the Cabinet Office, including No.10, the Office of Public Service and its agencies, the Civil Service College, Chessington Computer Centre (CCC), Recruitment and Assessment Service (RAS) and the Occupational Health and Safety Agency (OHSA), and my other Departments, Her Majesty's Stationery Office (HMSO) and the Central Office of Information.

HMSO, and three of the Department's agencies, CCC, RAS and OHSA, have been privatised during the present financial year, the answer covers their expenditure up to the date of privatisation.

	Cabinet Office/OPS and agencies	HMSO	COI
1992–93	6,755,403	451,463	150,174
1993–94	6,327,812	1,130,994	71,100
1994–95	6,250,950	1,833,396	169,862
1995–96	4,077,649	845,608	149,872
1996–97[1]	5,368,723	359,500	47,115

[1] Current financial year to 30 September 1996. Includes privatised agencies up to date of privatisation.

Consultants are not primarily used to achieve cost savings. The Department uses consultants to assist in the improvement of its operational efficiency and effectiveness, for example by better use of information technology, and to improve the delivery of Government programmes by drawing on expertise from the private sector. The benefits achieved are difficult to express in terms of cost savings. It is estimated that savings of £3 million to £4 million will be achieved following implementation of consultants' recommendations in the forthcoming year.

HEALTH

Prescribed Drugs (Adverse Reactions)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated since 1990 into the relationship between the numbers of elderly people admitted to hospital and the use of prescribed drugs; and if he will make a statement. [2891]

Mr. Horam: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many elderly (a) men and (b) women have been admitted to hospital in the United Kingdom as a consequence of an adverse reaction to (i) non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, (ii) phenothiazines, (iii) diuretics, (iv) analgesics, (v) night sedation, (vi) digoxin, (vii) laxatives, (viii) corticosteroids, (ix) beta blockers and (x) aminophylline in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [2892]

Mr. Horam: Figures on admissions relating to specific groups of drugs are not available centrally. The information that is available, which has been derived from the hospital episode statistics, has been placed in the Library.

Questions about hospital admissions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of, and how many, elderly people have been admitted to hospital in the United Kingdom for (i) postural hypertension, (ii) renal failure, (iii) dehydration and (iv) electrolyte imbalance as a direct result of taking prescribed diuretics in each of the last five years broken down by (a) gender and (b) age bands of 10 years, starting at 60 years; and if he will make a statement. [2880]

Mr. Horam: It is not possible to identify data relating specifically to prescribed drugs. The information available on admission in these categories where there is also a mention of diuretics has been placed in the Library.

Questions about hospital admissions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of, and how many, people have been admitted to hospital in the United Kingdom for (i) acute gastrointestinal bleed and (ii) anaemia through chronic GI bleed as a direct result of taking aspirin in each of the last five years broken down by (a) gender and (b) age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2881]

Mr. Horam: The information available, which is derived from the hospital episode statistics, has been placed in the Library.

Questions about hospital admissions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to the NHS of treating people admitted to hospital due to an adverse reaction to prescribed drugs in each of the last five years broken down by age bands of 10 years. [2887]

Mr. Horam: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of, and how many, people admitted to hospital in the United Kingdom, have been suffering adverse reactions to a prescribed drug in each of the last five years and in age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2903]

Mr. Horam: It is not possible to identify information relating specifically to prescribed drugs. The information that is available, which is derived from the hospital episode statistics, has been placed in the Library.

Questions about hospital admissions in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Tay-Sachs Disease

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals his Department has to make progress towards a treatment for Tay–Sachs disease. [3060]

Mr. Horam: A major part of the biomedical research in this country and abroad is directed towards a better understanding of metabolic diseases, such as Tay-Sachs. The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. Unfortunately, no treatment for Tay-Sachs has been discovered as yet.

Health Variations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action, supported with what new resources, he has taken to implement the recommendations of the variations sub-group of the chief medical officer's "The Health of the Nation" working group report on variations in health published on 23 October 1995. [3533]

Mr. Horam: Priorities and planning guidance issued to the national health service since the publication of the variations report asks health authorities to address variations in health, directly and through collaborating with others. The NHS executive has developed a framework to monitor health authorities' progress on improving their populations' health, as part of its general performance management. The Department has also commissioned a consultation exercise to inform the content of a £2.4 million research initiative on health variations, which will be launched shortly.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies have been commissioned by his Department to assess the relationship between poverty and ill health since 1979; and which of these studies have been published. [3532]

Mr. Horam: In October 1995, the Department of Health published a report on variations in health which reviews the available evidence on socio–economic and other variations in the five areas covered by the Government's health of the nation strategy. We are shortly to launch a £2.4 million research strategy on variations in health, including variations relating to socio–economic status.

Liver Cancer

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics his Department collates in respect of the proportion of primary liver cancers caused by hepatitis B; and if he will make a statement. [3418]

Mr. Horam: There are no reliable national data on the proportion of primary liver cancers that are associated with chronic hepatitis B infection in the United Kingdom. Data collected on primary liver cancer are not broken down by specific cause.

Nutritional Standards

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department issues regarding nutritional standards of food for school-age children; and if he will make a statement. [3421]

Mr. Horam: A sub-group of the nutrition task force is currently working on voluntary guidance for school providers. The guidance is due for publication early in 1997 and has been the result of a joint initiative between this department, the Department for Education and Employment, the Ministry for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and a project team comprising key individuals with an interest in the area.

Care in the Community

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidance he has issued to local councils and health authorities to co-ordinate their services to care for mentally ill patients in the community; and if he will make a statement; [3588]

(2) if he will list the principal guidance notes issued by his Department relating to the provision of care in the community. [3764]

Mr. Burns: Since 1990, the Department has issued the following guidance relating to the provision of care in the community for mentally ill people:

"Caring for People, The Care Programme Approach for people with a mental illness referred to the specialist psychiatric services" (HC(90)23/LASSL(90)11);

"The Health of the Nation Mental Illness Key Area Handbook" (1993);

"Introduction of supervision registers for mentally ill people from 1 April 1994" (HSG(94)5);

"Guidance on the discharge of mentally disordered people and their continuing care in the community" (HSG(94)27);

"Guidance on supervised discharge (after-care under supervision) and related provision" (HSG(96)11);

"Building Bridges" (1995);

"The Spectrum of Care" (1996);

"24 Hour Nursed Care for People with Severe and Enduring Mental Illness" (1996).

Copies of these are available in the Library.

Most of these documents include guidance on the co-ordination of services for people with mental illness. "Building Bridges" contains specific advice on inter-agency working for the care and protection of severely mentally ill people. A consultation document on mental health services will shortly be issued and further guidance may be issued in the light of responses.

Health Service Ombudsman

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on how many occasions in each of the last five years the health service ombudsman has found against a health authority or trust. [3935]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not collected centrally. Statistics on complaints investigated by the health service commissioner are included in his annual reports, copies of which are placed in the Library.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the value of capital expenditure undertaken by national health service trusts in each financial year since 1990–91. [3824]

Mr. Horam: The total national health service capital expenditure in England for 1991–92, 1992–93, 1993–94 and 1994–95 is set out in the table.

A figure for 1990–91 cannot be given as NHS trusts were not established until the following financial year.

The audited figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

The definition of capital has changed during this period; therefore comparisons between years cannot readily be made. For 1993–94, the threshold value for the definition of capital expenditure was increased from £1,000 to £5,000. As a result of this change, in 1993–94, over £100 million was transferred from capital to revenue to take account of the increase to the capital threshold.

Financial year	NHS trust capital expenditure £000
1991–92	223,515
1992–93	625,090
1993–94	1,098,769
1994–95	1,631,122

Plymouth and Torbay Community Health Councils

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to make a statement about the merger of the Plymouth and Torbay community health councils. [3948]

Mr. Horam: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met a delegation of representatives from Plymouth and District community health council on 23 October. A separate meeting with representatives of Torbay community health council is scheduled for 18 November, following which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be in a position to respond to the representations which have been put to him.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information is collected centrally on the long-term revenue commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative deals agreed by (a) his Department and (b) NHS trusts. [4000]

Mr. Horam: There are no private finance initiative deals yet entered into by the Department of Health itself. Information is not collected centrally on all commitments entered into by NHS trusts arising from private finance initiative projects.

Pension Schemes

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many requests for information the NHS superannuation scheme has received from pension providers undertaking reviews of pension transfers and opt-outs; in how many cases all appropriate information has been supplied; what is the average length of time taken to supply such information; and what moratorium has been introduced on supplying such information. [3347]

Mr. Horam: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the NHS Pensions Agency under its chief executive, Mr. A. F. Cowan. I have asked him to reply to the hon. Member.

Letter from A. F. Cowan to Mr. John Denham, dated 14 November 1996:

I am replying to the questions you have raised about requests from pension providers who are undertaking reviews of pension transfers and opt outs involving NHS employees.

This Agency has received 14,300 requests for information concerning NHS employees. We have received an additional 1,200 where there is no dispute about restitution of service. We have returned 575 questionnaires and provided 200 reinstatement costs calculations; 89 cases proceeded to actual reinstatement.

Because the Agency depends on NHS employers for up to date payroll data it can take between 3 to 8 weeks to complete questionnaires.

There is no formal moratorium in supplying information to pension providers. Cases are being dealt with on an ad hoc basis but in common with other public service schemes we have had to take special powers to resource the work. The legislation was made on 14 October 1996. We expect to commence systematic clearance of questionnaires in the next few weeks.

If you require any further information, please let me know.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Jobseeker's Allowance

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what reduction in public expenditure she estimates will ensue from the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance in the first full year of operation. [3286]

Mr. Forth: It is estimated that, in a full year, the introduction of JSA will produce direct benefit savings of £240 million. No estimates have been made of savings which might accrue from behavioural changes as a result of JSA.

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the costs incurred by her Department in publicising the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance in each region. [3927]

Mr. Forth: The costs incurred up to 31 October 1996 were £500,205, and related mainly to national publicity for jobseekers and external groups. This figure includes costs incurred by the Department, the Department for Social Security, the Employment Service and the Benefits Agency.

Class Sizes

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many classes in (a) primary and (b) secondary education there are with over 30 pupils; what were the figures in 1979; and what has been the percentage change. [3883]

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is shown in the following table:

Number of classes of 31 or more pupils taught by one teacher in maintained primary and secondary schools

England

Position in January in each year (1979 and 1996)

	1979	1996	Percentage change
Primary	44,899	38,338	–14.6
Secondary[1]	17,255	7,351	–57.4

[1] Excludes pupils in sixth form colleges which ceased to be classified as schools in April 1993.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is her estimate of the cost of reducing to a maximum of 30 maintained infant and primary school classes for pupils aged between five and 11 years. [3881]

Mr. Squire: The Department's statisticians estimate that it would have cost between £310 million and £570 million to reduce to a maximum of 30 pupils all single-teacher nursery and primary classes in January 1996. The exact cost would depend on the extent to which children in larger classes could be accommodated in existing smaller classes or grouped together in new classes. The estimated costs are for extra teachers only, and make no allowance for further costs such as extra accommodation.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the (a) pupil—teacher ratio in each year and (b) the expenditure per pupil in each year since 1980. [3882]

Mr. Squire: The available information is shown in the following table:

Pupil: teacher ratio and expenditure per pupil for maintained nursery, primary and secondary[1] schools

England

1979–1980 to 1995–1996

Financial year	Overall pupil: teacher ratio[2]	Expenditure[3,4] per pupil (£)
1979–1980	18.7	513
1980–1981	18.6	651
1981–1982	18.5	740
1982–1983	18.1	811
1983–1984	17.9	872
1984–1985	17.8	924
1985–1986	17.6	991
1986–1987	17.3	1,110
1987–1988	17.0	1,238
1988–1989	17.0	1,361
1989–1990	17.0	1,487
1990–1991	17.2	1,623
1991–1992	17.2	1,749

1993–1994	18.1	1,866
1994–1995	18.3	1,890
1995–1996	18.5	n/a

[1] Excludes sixth form colleges from 1993–1994.
[2] Position in January.
[3] Net institutional expenditure in cash terms.
[4] Includes LEA maintained schools only.
n/a = not available.

Truancy

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of truancy rates at grant-maintained schools relative to those at other schools. [3888]

Mr. Forth: Rates of unauthorised absence at different categories of schools in the 1994–95 school year are set out in the following table. As in previous years, rates of unauthorised absence were significantly lower at grant-maintained schools. Data for the 1995–96 school year will be published shortly.

Unauthorised absence by type of school in England in the 1994–95 school year

Type of school	Percentage of half days missed	Average number of half days missed per absent pupil
Maintained primary schools[1]
County and voluntary controlled	0.5	11
Voluntary aided and special agreement	0.4	10
Grant-maintained	0.3	8
Average for maintained primary schools	0.5	10
Maintained secondary schools[2]
County and voluntary controlled	1.2	22
Voluntary aided and special agreement	0.8	21
Grant-maintained	0.5	17
Average for maintained secondary schools	1.0	22
Special Schools	2.5	27

Employment Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library a copy of the material prepared by the consultants Ernst and Young for the Employment Service, prior to the recent announcement about reductions in activity at the service headquarters. [3918]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Grover to Mr. David Blunkett, dated 14 November 1996:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question on whether a copy of the Ernst and Young material associated with the Review of the Employment Service Headquarters will be placed in the Library of the House.

You may find it helpful to have some background on the work. The Chief Executive commissioned the consultants Ernst and Young to help the Employment Service (ES) Board think through issues concerning the future role of our Headquarters (Head Office and nine Regional Offices) and to develop an overview of the type of Headquarters the Agency would need. We accomplished this through a series of workshops of ES Board members and senior managers, facilitated by the consultants, who provided advice and fact-finding based on their work in organisations elsewhere. Our aim is to now draw on that work to inform more detailed change projects over the next three years.

The consultants did not submit a formal report to the Board. However, I set out the key strands of our thinking and proposals for further work below.

ES's field operations have previously been subject to rigorous examination of need, effectiveness and cost. The Agency has become smaller as unemployment has fallen and it is now appropriate to apply a similar approach to our HQ functions;

our examination concluded that the ES could be managed better and more cost effectively by eliminating duplication of functions between Head and Regional Offices which lead to reworking and loss of economies of scale; improving our Headquarter business processes; and contracting out some support functions;

this had led us to develop a blueprint for ES Headquarters of a small directing and enabling head office and a regional management tier focusing on the delivery of services to our clients; to realise this, the Chief Executive has commissioned more detailed work to reduce Headquarters activities in areas not directly related to delivery of services to our clients; rebrigade (possibly to single sites) a number of support functions, and actively explore the scope for contracting out a number of support functions.

I hope this is helpful in giving more information on what we are seeking to achieve.

School Funding

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans the Government have to preserve the per capita funding required by schools in sparsely populated areas to deliver an equivalent standard of services to that provided by urban schools. [4055]

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment will be making a statement on the Government's plans for the distribution of funding between local authorities in 1997–98, shortly after the budget. Local authorities will continue to be responsible for distributing funds between schools in their areas.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what are the latest estimates of the expenditure on external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1996 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in. [4063]

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on 17 October 1996, Official Report, column 1130.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many different national vocational qualifications are currently available; and of these which have (a) never been awarded and (b) been awarded to only one person. [3593]

Mr. Paice [holding answer 11 November 1996]: I am informed by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications that 843 national vocational qualifications were accredited by them at 30 June 1996. A total of 351 of these had not, at that date, attracted full awards and 39 had attracted one award. Individual NVQs are subject to accreditation at regular intervals, and, given the time it takes after accreditation for awards to become available to centres, and individuals to train towards them, at any one time a considerable proportion of individual NVQs will have attracted few awards. Of those awards available at March 1996 and which were accredited before April 1993, 38 had attracted no awards.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Abortion Legislation

12. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received about applying the abortion legislation which applies in the rest of the United Kingdom to Northern Ireland. [2524]

Mr. Moss: In the six months from May to October of this year, there have been 29 representations from the public and one hon. Member opposing the application to Northern Ireland of the abortion legislation which applies in the rest of the United Kingdom. No representations supporting the application were received.

Construction Industry

13. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the employment situation within the construction industry in Northern Ireland. [2525]

Mr. Moss: At June 1996, there were 22,430 employees in employment in construction in Northern Ireland, which is some 3.9 per cent. of total employees. This is a decrease of 230 employees (–1 per cent.) over the quarter and 930 (–4 per cent.) over the year. The most up-to-date information on the number of self-employed workers in the industry is from the 1991 census of population, at which time the figure stood at 13,970. The number of unemployed claimants indicating the construction industry as their usual source of employment was 14,310 as at September 1996.

Inward Investment

14. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about inward investment in Northern Ireland. [2527]

Mr. Ancram: The year ended 31 March 1996 was the best ever year for inward investment in Northern Ireland, with 35 projects secured, offering 4,869 new jobs and representing total investment of £432 million—a 55 per cent. increase in jobs promoted on the previous year. This confirms the increasing interest shown in Northern Ireland as an investment location.

Schools Investment, Strangford

15. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what major capital investments in schools in the constituency of Strangford are scheduled for the next financial year. [2528]

Mr. Ancram: The school building programme for the next financial year has yet to be determined.

Tourism

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest trends in the number of tourists visiting Northern Ireland. [2529]

Mr. Ancram: Estimates by the Northern Ireland tourist board suggest that some 1,385,000 visitors will come to Northern Ireland during 1996, contributing some £202 million in tourism revenue. Of these, around 345,000, or 25 per cent. will be holiday visitors. These figures represent falls of 11 per cent., 6 per cent. and 25 per cent. respectively over the record levels of 1995, but all remain above 1994 pre-ceasefire levels.

Next Steps Agencies

17. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to increase the number of next steps agencies in Northern Ireland. [2530]

Sir John Wheeler: There are currently 24 next steps agencies in Northern Ireland. Prior options studies are taking place in relation to a further nine executive activities which are potential agency candidates. The decision as to whether these activities should be conducted by agencies will depend on the conclusions of the prior options analyses.

Heterosexual Age of Consent

18. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the Government's policy regarding the reduction of Northern Ireland's heterosexual age of consent to the age of consent applying in mainland Britain. [2531]

Sir John Wheeler: The age of consent for women in Northern Ireland is 17 years—one year older than in Great Britain. The age of consent was 16 years until 1950 when, following the recommendation of an independent report, the Government of Northern Ireland raised it to 17 years.

I am aware of no significant body of opinion in Northern Ireland arguing for the reduction of the age of consent to 16 years.

Issues such as the age of consent are essentially matters of conscience and are best dealt with on the initiative of private Members.

Irish Republican Army

19. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made towards securing a declaration of a permanent cessation of violence by the Irish Republican Army. [2532]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: It is not for the Government to petition the IRA for a cessation of violence. Such violence is repugnant and wholly without justification. A democratic process of dialogue designed to reach agreement on a broadly acceptable way forward for Northern Ireland is in place and is on offer to Sinn Fein. It knows what needs to happen for it to be able to take part.

Religious Education

20. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to reform religious education in Northern Ireland schools; and if he will make a statement. [2533]

Mr. Ancram: I have no plans to reform religious education in Northern Ireland schools.

Employment and Training

21. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has to meet trade union and business leaders in order to discuss employment and training issues. [2534]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for this subject has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 12 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency to reply to your question about proposals to meet trade union and business leaders in order to discuss with them employment and training issues.

You will be interested to know that I meet regularly with both trade union and business leaders to discuss a wide range of employment and training issues. I have had recent meetings with representatives of the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions, the Confederation of British Industry, the Institute of Directors and the Northern Ireland Chamber of Commerce and Industry. In September, I hosted a dinner in Londonderry in honour of Mr. John Monks, General Secretary, TUC and which was attended by senior trade union and business leaders. The Agency also has a very close working relationship with the Northern Ireland Growth Challenge through its Education, Training and Employment Sub-committee. Two members of the Agency's Board are trade union representatives.

In Northern Ireland, employers' training interests are represented by 16 industry led Sector Training Councils with which we also work closely. Incidentally, the Agency is currently working in partnership with the Engineering Training Council to support the "Year of Engineering Success" in 1997.

The Agency will continue to meet regularly with trade union and business leaders.

Peace Process

22. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position on the peace process in Northern Ireland. [2535]

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Members for Walsall, North (Mr. Winnick), for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) and for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) earlier today.

Security Situation

23. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland. [2536]

Sir John Wheeler: As the new Chief Constable said recently, the Provisional IRA has shown that it is prepared to prolong the misery and suffering, but the security forces will do all in their power to deter terrorist attacks. Following the bomb in Thiepval barracks, the security forces immediately re-introduced such security measures as were considered appropriate. In particular, there has been an increase in Army patrolling and snap vehicle checkpoints are being set up in many areas around Northern Ireland. In addition, some town barriers are closed at night and vigilance has been heightened.

Water and Sewerage Charges

24. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the levels of water and sewerage charges to customers in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [2537]

Mr. Moss: Since 1 April 1996, representations have been received from 15 sources. They are a district councillor, 11 district councils, the Association of Local Authorities of Northern Ireland, the Ulster Farmers Union and a public sector company. In responding to all representations made, the Department explained that, in line with Government policy, it was committed to moving progressively towards charges fully reflecting supply costs.

Primary Health Care

25. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to encourage research and development in primary health care in Northern Ireland. [2538]

Mr. Moss: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 31 October, Official Report, column 258.

Irish Language

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new proposals he has to improve the teaching of the Irish language in Northern Ireland educational institutions. [2518]

Mr. Ancram: As part of our continuing support for Irish-medium schools, I have asked the education and library boards to co-operate in establishing a new unit to prepare teaching materials for use in Irish-medium schools and to provide a central source of Irish-medium expertise to support schools on a Province-wide basis.

Mr. Colin Duffey

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had with the Royal Ulster Constabary following the quashing of Mr. Colin Duffey's conviction; and if he will make a statement. [2519]

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no reason to discuss the case with the Royal Ulster Constabulary, nor is it customary for the Government to make statements about the outcome of criminal cases.

Animal Blood

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Departments of Health and Social Security and Agriculture have approved the spreading of animal blood on fields; and if he will make a statement. [2445]

Mr. Ancram: The practice of spreading blood on land as a fertiliser is an acceptable method of disposal.

The feeding of animal protein to ruminants is prohibited under the Specified Bovine Material (No. 2) Order (Northern Ireland) 1996. Spreading of blood on land while livestock are grazing it, or moving livestock unto such land shortly after spreading, would be in contravention of the order as the livestock could ingest animal protein.

The Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee, which is the independent committee of experts that advises the Government on matters relating to BSE, has confirmed that disposal of blood on land, other than by burial, is acceptable.

Prescribed Drugs (Adverse Effects)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many elderly (a) men and (b) women have been admitted to hospital in Northern Ireland as a consequence of an adverse reaction to (i) non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs, (ii) phenothiazines, (iii) diuretics, (iv) analgesics, (v) night sedation, (vi) digoxin, (viii) laxatives, (viii) corticosteroids, (ix) beta blockers and (x) aminophylline in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [2906]

Mr. Moss: The table gives the number of patients aged 65 years or over who were recorded as admitted to hospital in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years with a recorded adverse reaction in terms of the categories requested.

When interpreting these figures, it should be noted that they are likely to understate the incidence of adverse reaction because this is not always recorded, particularly in earlier years, in the level of detail required by the question.

Owing to non-specific information requested, 1,2,3 have had to be interpreted as follows:
[1] NSAIDs: Figures given refer to recorded adverse reaction to anti-inflamatory drugs (ICD9 E946.0).
[2] Night Sedation: Figures given refer to recorded adverse reaction to sleeping pillos (ICD9 E937.9).
[3] Laxatives: Figures given refer to recorded adverse reaction to mineral oil laxative (ICD9 E943.2).

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of, and how many, people admitted to hospital in Northern Ireland have been suffering from adverse reactions to a prescribed drug in each of the last five years and in age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2908]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is set out in the tables.

When interpreting these figures, it should be noted that they are likely to understate the incidence of adverse reaction because this is not always recorded, particularly in earlier years, in the level of detail required by the question.

Preparations

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the average (a) number of types and (b) quantity of preparations taken by people in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years broken down by (i) gender and (ii) age bands of 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [2886]

Mr. Moss: No estimate has been made.

Education and Library Boards

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that each compulsory competitive tendering contract involving the education and library boards in Northern Ireland adheres to policy appraisal and fair treatment guidelines. [2759]

Mr. Ancram: The Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 precludes education and library boards from taking account of non-commercial matters in conducting any contracting activities.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the cost of the planning and preparation work he has proposed to be undertaken before 1 April 1998 for the introduction of his proposals to change the education and library boards. [3598]

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 7 November 1996, Official Report, column 674.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what resettlement grants staff affected by his proposals for changing education and library boards and the regionalisation of board services will be eligible for; and what estimate he has made of the costs of such grants. [3599]

Mr. Ancram: Under their terms and conditions of service, education and library board staff may be eligible for excess travel or removal expenses. It is not possible to estimate the cost involved in advance of detailed planning for the new structures and the identification of those individuals both affected by the reorganisation and eligible for such expenses.

Ex-offenders (Rehabilitation)

Ms Mowlem: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the rehabilitation programmes available in Northern Ireland for ex-offenders and the numbers of people who participated in them in each of the last five years. [2789]

Sir John Wheeler: Information is not available in the form requested. However, in addition to pre-release programmes within the prisons and a full range of public services which are open to all citizens, there is available within the community a wide spectrum of programmes specifically for ex-offenders and persons at risk of offending. These are operated either directly by the Probation Board for Northern Ireland or by voluntary and community bodies to which, in 1995–96, it paid grants totalling over £2 million. The board itself, as part of its on-going activities, runs programmes for its clients on a range of themes including cognitive skills, alcohol management, sexual abuse, domestic violence and other forms of violent behaviour.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the impact of the decision of the Royal Group of Hospitals announced on 30 October in relation to surgical operations on the waiting lists for various procedures for the Down Health and Social Services Lisburn trust area. [2760]

Mr. Moss: As a result of the budget savings which were required this year to meet priority developments, fewer elective surgical operations will take place and waiting lists and times will therefore increase to some extent. However, this must be judged in the context of the enormous inroads which have been made into waiting lists and waiting times since 1992. For example, in that year, about 3,000 patients were waiting two years or more for admission. In March this year, virtually nobody was waiting more than two years, while 800 were waiting more than 18 months. The number of patients treated has risen continually over the same period from a total of 330,000 ordinary admissions and day cases in 1991–92 to approximately 400,000 approximately in 1995–96.

School Leavers

Ms Mowlem: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of school leavers in Northern Ireland, who went into higher education, went to establishments in (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Great Britain, (c) the Republic of Ireland and (d) elsewhere in each of the last five years. [2788]

Mr. Ancram: The percentage of school leavers in Northern Ireland who went to higher education in each of the last five years to establishments in Northern Ireland, Great Britain and elsewhere is as follows:

	Northern Ireland	Great Britain	Elsewhere
1990–91	62.5	34.3	3.2
1991–92	59.0	36.8	4.2
1992–93	59.4	36.1	4.6
1993–94	57.4	35.5	7.0
1994–95	61.0	34.0	5.0

[1] Information on school leavers who went into higher education in the Republic of Ireland is not collected separately.

Drug Seizures

Ms Mowlem: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the seizures of drugs by (a) type and (b) quantity in Northern Ireland (i) at ports, (ii) at the border between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland and (iii) elsewhere in each of the last five years. [2790]

Sir John Wheeler: Details of drug seizures are held as a total, by type of drug, for each year; these figures are set out below. It is not possible to specify where seizures were made.

Planning Guidelines

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what evaluation his Department has made of the capacity of the planning system to absorb a new (a) low impact and (b) permaculture use class into existing guidelines; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of this policy. [3366]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T.W. Stewart to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your question about an evaluation of the capacity of the planning system to absorb (a) low impact and (b) permaculture use class into existing guidelines; and what assessment has been made of the advantages of this policy.

The Planning Service has made no such evaluation or assessment. We will, however, monitor the outcome of any evaluation undertaken in the rest of the United Kingdom, and assess what relevance, if any, it may have for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review (a) PPG7 and (b) other planning guidance on agricultural and other dwellings in the countryside in order to give greater weight to environmental and social sustainability; and if he will make a statement. [3380]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your Question about a review of PPG 7 and other planning guidance on agricultural and other dwellings in the countryside in order to give greater weight to environmental and social sustainability.

PPG 7 does not extend to Northern Ireland. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland's planning policy for rural areas is set out in the publication "A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland", published in September 1993, which seeks to give effect to environmental and social sustainability principles, at the same time meeting the needs of a strong dispersed rural community. Copies of this publication are available in the Library. The Planning Service intends commencing a formal review of the Strategy in the year 2000, and in carrying out the review, will take into account guidance available elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated into the advantages of establishing a permaculture use class within the planning system; and if he will make a statement. [3376]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your Question about research into the advantages of establishing a permaculture use class within the planning system.

The Planning Service has neither (a) planned, (b) commissioned nor (c) evaluated any such research. We will, however, monitor the outcome of any research undertaken in the rest of the United Kingdom, and assess what relevance, if any, it may have for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated into establishing practical criteria for assessing sustainable and low-impact developments, with particular regard to rural areas; and if he will make a statement. [3267]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your Question about research into the advantages of establishing practical criteria for assessing sustainable and low impact developments, with particular regard for rural areas.

You will be interested to know that the Agency's corporate aim is "to plan and manage development in ways which will contribute to a quality environment and seek to meet the economic and social aspirations of the present and future generations". Sustainability is, therefore, a crucial factor in the determination of planning applications. In addition, in May 1994, the Agency issued detailed illustrated guidance on rural design, in the form of a publication entitled "A Design Guide for Rural Northern Ireland". Copies of this publication are available in the Library.

The Planning Service has neither (a) planned, (b) commissioned nor (c) evaluated any such research. We will, however, monitor the outcome of any research undertaken in the rest of the United Kingdom, and assess what relevance, if any, it may have for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment his Department has made of the advantages of giving additional weight to environmental impact in determining planning restrictions on agricultural buildings. [3362]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. Martyn Jones, dated 13 November 1996:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your Question about what assessment has been made of the advantages of giving additional weight to environmental impact in determining restrictions on agricultural holdings.

The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland's planning policy for rural areas is set out in the publication "A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland", published in September 1993, which seeks to give effect to environmental impact in determining restrictions on agricultural holdings, at the same time meeting the needs of a strong rural community. Copies of this publication are available in the Library. The Planning Service intends commencing a formal review of the Strategy in the year 2000, and in carrying out the review, will take into account guidance available elsewhere in the United Kingdom.

The Planning Service has not made any such assessment. We will, however, monitor the outcome of any assessment undertaken in the rest of the United Kingdom, and assess what relevance, if any, it may have for Northern Ireland.

School Pupils, Strangford

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils there are at each (a) primary and (b) secondary school, including grammar, schools, in the constituency of Strangford; and what were the equivalent figures for each school three years ago. [3183]

Loughview integrated primary school opened 1 September 1993.

Woodland Projects

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further support his Department proposes to promote existing projects currently experimenting with the integration of woodland-based manufacturing economies with an increase in the planting of deciduous woodland; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of supporting existing projects. [3228]

Mr. Ancram: There are no plans to promote such projects in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated with regard to integrating proposals to increase deciduous woodland with the creation of woodland-based manufacturing economies; what financial commitments his Department has made in this area; and if he will make a statement. [3232]

Mr. Ancram: No research has been carried out in this area, no such research is planned, and no financial commitments have been made.

Open University

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the public expenditure in each of the past three years in support of the Open university in Northern Ireland; and how many students were enrolled with the Open university in each of these years. [3184]

Mr. Ancram: Since 1993, the Open university has been funded centrally by the Higher Education Funding Council for England. The university has been unable to provide separate figures for its activities in Northern Ireland.

The total number of students enrolled with the Open university in Northern Ireland in the past three years was:

Year	Number of students
1994	2,685
1995	3,016
1996	3,843

Affordable Housing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the role of low-impact and self-build accommodation in the provision of affordable housing; and if he will make a statement. [3371]

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive, as part of its strategic role, assessed the role of low-impact and self-build accommodation in its recent review of the Northern Ireland housing market 1997–98 to 1999–2000. The Housing Executive intends to consult other key housing interests to determine what further contribution self-build accommodation can make in Northern Ireland.

Pensioners (Income Support)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pensioners are currently claiming income support in Northern Ireland. [2523]

Mr. Moss: The information which is available shows that, at 31 August 1996, there were 67,872 income support claimants in receipt of pensioner premiums in Northern Ireland.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimates he has made of the additional running costs of further education colleges after incorporation. [3600]

Mr. Ancram: The Department of Education is currently in discussion with the education and library boards about the level of resources to transfer to colleges on incorporation. Colleges will have to determine their staffing and operating structures in the light of available resources.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the additional expenditure to be incurred by the Department of Education as a consequence of the incorporation of the further education colleges. [3601]

Mr. Ancram: The administrative structure required within the Department as a result of the incorporation of colleges is dependent on the final shape of the legislative framework. Final decisions on the nature of the administrative arrangements cannot be made until this is known.

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 282, on the introduction of the nursery voucher scheme, if he will provide a breakdown of the estimated expenditure of £300,000 on administrative costs on the nursery voucher scheme; how many children will be involved in each year; and what the per capita cost of administration for each voucher place will be. [3561]

Mr. Ancram: An estimated £100,000 will be spent each year on administration of the pre-school voucher scheme by the voucher company. A further breakdown is not available as the contract has not yet been finalised. An estimated 10,900 full-time equivalent pupils will be involved each year. The estimated cost of administration per full-time equivalent pupil is £9.17.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions are contained in the contract with Capita for administering the nursery voucher scheme to allow its early termination; at what cost; and on what conditions. [3562]

Mr. Ancram: Details of the arrangements for terminating the pre-school voucher contract are not available as the contract for the national scheme has not yet been finalised.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what expenditure he has incurred to date in preparation for the proposed nursery voucher scheme; and on what. [3563]

Mr. Ancram: The sum of £17,000 has been spent on preparation of a pre-school curriculum by the Northern Ireland Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment.

Handguns

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many registered owners of handguns have reported handguns lost or stolen since 1990. [2514]

Sir John Wheeler: The Chief Constable has advised me that the total number of firearms, of all categories, reported stolen in Northern Ireland between 1990 and 31 December 1995 is 455.

Separate figures are not available for stolen handguns, and details of firearms reported lost during this period could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Security Situation

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current security situation in Northern Ireland. [2522]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for North Tayside (Mr. Walker) earlier today.

Organic Farming

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year since 1994 (a) what forms of financial aid was available exclusively for organic farmers in Northern Ireland, (b) what administrative procedures was required for its acquisition, (c) how much money was earmarked, (d) what percentage of the money annually earmarked was received by farmers in that year; and if he will make a statement. [2368]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 4 November 1996]: No aid was available prior to 24 April 1995. Since that date, farmers have been able to apply under the organic aid scheme for financial aid covering the five-year period of conversion from conventional to organic farming. The aid provided to cover income foregone during the period of conversion.

To obtain aid, a farmer must register the land as in conversion with the UK register of organic food standards—UKROFS—or a body approved by UKROFS, and follow detailed prescriptions set out in the scheme.

The financial provision for this scheme for 1995–96 is £60,000.

To date, the scheme has attracted only one participant, but no payments have been issued.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 15 November 1996

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tea Room

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee if he will set out the costs of the reconstruction, refurbishment and re-equipment of the House of Commons Tea Room. [4374]

Sir Raymond Powell: The cost of the new serveries in the Tea Room was £85,000. The refurbishment was carried out in conjunction with the construction of the new Terrace Cafeteria kitchen which also serves the Tea Room and it is not possible to allocate the costs of the various elements of the project meaningfully between the two areas.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the role of low-impact and self-built accommodation in the provision of affordable housing; and if he will make a statement. [3372]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I encourage energy efficiency in homes, the tackling of empty houses and the use of redundant buildings for housing. The Welsh Office encourages and supports local authorities to facilitate self-building of affordable homes, but this forms a small part of the total affordable home programme.

Wrexham Central Station

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list (a) the value of and (b) the number of grants to Trinity Investments and Railtrack to develop land surrounding Wrexham Central station; what tendering procedures have been followed; and for how long the grant is available. [4290]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Trinity Investments has been awarded, in principle, an urban investment grant not exceeding £3.5 million. The grant is subject to the conclusion of a legal agreement between the Welsh Development Agency and Trinity Investments.

Railtrack is not in receipt of grant.

Trinity Investments is responsible for the appointment of contractors to undertake the scheme. The tendering procedures do not involve the Department. Offer of grant is conditional upon a start on site by 31 March 1997. If the developer fails to start then, the project is subject to review.

Transport Policy

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to publish a strategic transport policy for Wales. [4292]

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the oral answer given to the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) on 4 November, Official Report, column 896.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3816]

Mr. Hanley: We have placed 33 contracts with EDS since 1985, individual values as follows:

1. £8,114.00
2. £17,881.00
3. £604.00
4. £3,376.00
5. £80,760.00
6. £13,832.00
7. £4,682.00
8. £4,682.00
9. £82,746.00
10. £8,788.00
11. £72,950.00
12. £7,562.50
13. £11,950.00
14. £2,100.00
15. £8,200.00
16. £58,990.00
17. £16,784.00
18. £17,881.00
19. £1,254.00
20. £35,762.00
21. £11,000.00
22. £4,885.00
23. £4,500.00
24. £54,000.00
25. £4,720.00
26. £4,682.00
27. £9,265.00
28. £10,000.00
29. £1,900.00
30. £7,000.00

31. £7,500.00

32. £12,000.00

33. £2,100.00.

(a) All contracts were completed to the satisfaction of this Department.

(b) (i) and (ii) No significant modifications were made by either party.

(c) It has not been possible to identify whether any jobs were done in-house; and there have been no quantifiable job reductions arising from the above contracts.

Pakistan

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the change of Government in Pakistan on relations with the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [3912]

Mr. Liam Fox: We have good relations with Pakistan, and look forward to them continuing under the current Government and in the future. We continue to follow developments in Pakistan closely.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when an application to reside in the United Kingdom was made by (a) Mrs. Benazir Bhutto and (b) her husband. [3986]

Dr. Fox: We treat in confidence all information given in connection with visa and immigration matters. It is our practice not to reveal whether such applications have been made, or any information about such applications.

LORD CHANCELLORS'S DEPARTMENT

Marriage and the Family (Support)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the scope and conditions of his proposed consultation regarding the strengthening and support of marriage and the family. [3543]

Mr. Streeter: The marriage task force, which was set up by the Lord Chancellor in April 1995, recently completed a consultation exercise on the most effective ways of supporting marriage. Forty eight marriage support agencies have now been invited to submit proposals for pilot projects under a programme to be funded by the Lord Chancellor's Department. The award of contracts under the programme will be announced early in 1997, and the projects are expected to start in April. The exact number and coverage of the projects will not be known until all the bids have been evaluated.

TREASURY

ECOFIN

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent Council meeting of the Economic and Finance Ministers of the European Union. [4625]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I represented the UK at the Economic and Finance Council—ECOFIN—of the European Union in Brussels on 11 November.

The Council considered a draft report to the Dublin European Council on reinforced convergence procedures and a new exchange rate mechanism in third stage of EMU.

The Council considered a report from the Commission on the stability pact for ensuring budgetary discipline in the third stage of EMU. This will be discussed again at the December Council.

The Council took note of progress in the working group which is preparing Community regulations to form the legal framework which will govern how the single currency will be introduced and used. This work will be considered again at the December Council.

The Council took note of Commissioner Monti's report on taxation in the European Union. It was agreed that a high-level tax policy group should continue to examine taxation issues.

Commissioner Liikanen presented the report of the high-level group which has been looking at sound and efficient management 2000—the Commission's programme of financial management reform. The report will be discussed again at the December Council.

The Council discussed further lending to Ukraine, including the disbursement of the second tranche of the 200 mecu loan agreed in 1995 with a view to its disbursement when the loan conditions have been met.

The Council also discussed the renewal of the European investment bank's lending mandates. The mandates are due to be agreed by the Council by the end of the year and will therefore be discussed again in December.

The Council considered convergence reports from the Commission and the European Monetary Institute, as required by article 109j of the Treaty on European Union, and agreed that a majority of member states did not satisfy the criteria and that the Community should therefore not move to the third stage of economic and monetary union in 1997. A final decision on the issue will be taken by the Council meeting as Heads of State and Government in December. This decision is a legal formality as the European Council at Florence has already ruled out a 1997 start date for the single currency.

Building Societies

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rules govern the payment of bonuses by building societies converting to banks in respect of individuals who have two building society accounts in their names; and if he will review the rules to ensure that charitable organisations that hold building society accounts in the name of an individual who also has a personal account receive bonus payments made when a building society converts to a bank. [3517]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The Building Societies Act 1986 gives converting building societies considerable discretion in structuring their distribution schemes. A society could propose to confer a benefit on each account held by an individual. The structure of distribution schemes is a matter for the societies concerned [illegible] for their members.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Non-taught School Activities

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment to what extent areas intended to be used for communal non-taught school activities are taken into account when calculating the adequacy of classroom provision in relation to the number of pupils attending a school. [4056]

Mrs. Gillan: Decisions about the size of individual classrooms and other areas within schools are a matter for local education authorities and grant-maintained school governing bodies.

Hendon School

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils sought to enter Hendon school in September 1996; and what was the figure in September 1987. [3890]

Mr. Robin Squire: I understand that, in 1987, 146 applications were made for a place at Hendon school, and that this year the number was 462.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will make a statement on the change in the number of pupils seeking to attend GM schools since they attained GM status. [3946]

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected centrally.

Dyslexia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to liaise with employers to enable those with dyslexia to obtain jobs; and if she will make a statement. [4202]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from D. J. L. Grover to Mr. Barry Jones, dated 15 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to you about proposals to liaise with employers to enable those with Dyslexia to obtain jobs.

As part of the Employment Service's national job broking role, specialist Placing, Advice and Counselling Teams (PACTs) already liaise with employers to encourage good practice in recruiting and employing people with disabilities, to promote better understanding of disabled people's potential in work, including those with dyslexia, and specifically to place disabled people in jobs.

The Employment Service's disability symbol initiative helps employers to implement good practices. PACTs' continuing work in influencing employers' practices, both to adopt the Disability Symbol and more widely, will support the new Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) the employment provisions of which come into effect on 2 December this year.

The specialist Disability Employment Advisers (DEAs) who work within the PACTs are specifically trained so that they are able to provide assessment, tailored employment rehabilitation (including employer placements) and advice on aids and special equipment as well as directly finding employment opportunities for people with disabilities, including those with dyslexia. Additionally the ES also produces a booklet "Sources of Information and Advice". This gives employers information about organisations which can offer advice or services covering a variety of disabilities and includes the British Dyslexia Association and the Dyslexia Institute.

I hope this is helpful.

School Class Sizes

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 76, on school class sizes, what proportion of primary schools and secondary schools in 1979 had classes of more than 30 pupils. [4390]

Mr. Robin Squire: Fifty nine per cent. of primary schools and 74 per cent. of secondary schools had at least one class of more than 30 pupils taught by one teacher in January 1979.

Preston School, Stockton-on-Tees

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were (a) the initial assessments and (b) the consultations reached by the Department's inspection team which visited Preston school, Eaglescliffe, Stockton-on-Tees. [4481]

Mr. Robin Squire: Officials from the Department visited Preston school in September following an invitation from the head of the school. They did not inspect the school—that would be for the Office for Standards in Education. They were accompanied by officers from Stockton local education authority, who explained that the LEA intended to include improvement work at the school in a capital bid, to be made in the autumn of 1997 for the financial year 1998–99. That is a matter for the LEA.

Teacher Education

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) when she intends to publish the summary of the first draft report of the primary sweep inspection of teacher education departments; [4375]

(2) if she will list the head teachers who will be responsible for conducting the re-inspection of teacher education departments; and if she will publish their CVs. [4377]

Mr. Forth: These are matters for Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when she intends to publish her proposals for a national curriculum for teacher education. [4376]

Mr. Forth: In her announcement on 18 September, my right hon. Friend made it clear that the first stage of the national curriculum would be primary English and mathematics. The proposals on this will be published for consultation early in 1997.

Proposals on the curriculum for secondary English and mathematics, and primary and secondary science, will be published later.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations she has received from the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on the issue of the re-inspection of teacher education departments. [4389]

Mr. Forth: None. My right hon. Friend expects all providers of initial teacher training to give inspectors access; that is a condition of their public funding.

Teacher Training Agency

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people are employed in the Teacher Training Agency; and what is the total salary bill. [4378]

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for the Teacher Training Agency. I will ask the chairman of the agency, Mr. Geoffrey Parker, to write to the hon. Member direct.

TRANSPORT

Buses (Rotherham)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to encourage national bus companies to serve Rotherham. [3891]

Mr. Watts: The Government are working with bus operators and local authorities on a national basis to encourage the development of bus services and promote their use. However, the provision of services in Rotherham, as elsewhere, is primarily a matter for the commercial judgment of bus operators and for the local authority, which has power to subsidise socially necessary services which are not being provided commercially.

Office of Passenger Rail Franchising

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what redress is available to Opraf in the event of a rail franchise operator (a) failing to comply with the terms of the passenger service requirement for the franchise and (b) failing to complete the full time scale of the franchise. [4051]

Mr. Watts: The passenger service requirement—PSR—forms part of the franchise agreement. Franchisees are required, within their access agreements with Railtrack, to ensure that the services set out in the PSR are in the timetable. Failure to use all reasonable endeavours do so is an event of default. Franchisees may also commit either a breach of the franchise agreement or an event of default if they fail to meet thresholds for reliability set out in the agreement. In addition, some operators will be penalised under the incentive regime for delays or cancellations for commuter and regional services.

If there is a breach of the franchise agreement, the franchising director may serve an enforcement order requiring compliance. Failure to comply is an event of default. If an event of default occurs, the franchising director has the power to terminate a franchise and to call the performance bond. All franchisees are required to subscribe a percentage of the initial level of capital required by the franchising director to underwrite the franchise to fund a performance bond. The performance bond will be used to contribute to any additional costs or liabilities which the franchising director or a successor operator may incur due to, among other things, premature termination of the franchise.

Traffic Area Offices

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to close the traffic area offices in Manchester and Cardiff. [4116]

Mr. Bowis: We plan to complete the closure of the traffic area offices in Manchester and Cardiff by the end of the current financial year.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to lay a statutory instrument before the House to redefine traffic area office boundaries. [4117]

Mr. Bowis: I expect to make an announcement shortly.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) his Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3805]

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is set out in the table. The value of each contract has not been revealed on the grounds that this information is commercially confidential.

Year	Number of contracts	Contract completed	Modifications made at the behest of EDS	Modifications made at the behest of the Department	Work under contract being undertaken in-house	Number of job reductions arising from contracting out work
1991	1	Yes	None	None	No	None
1993	1	No	None	None	No	None
1993	1	No	None	None[1]	Yes[2]	None[3]
1993	1	No	None	None	No	None
1993	1	No	None	None	Yes[4]	None
1994	1	Yes	None	None	No	None
1996	1	No	None	None	No	None

Information on contracts awarded before 1991 is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Notes:

[1] EDS has been asked to provide prices for the development of new systems to meet legislative requirements.

[2] Three EDS members of staff form part of a joint account management unit at DVLA.

[3] No job reductions, but 320 DOT staff working for DVOIT transferred to EDS on the sale of the organisation to that company.

[4] Ten EDS members of staff are engaged on a project for the provision of a new booking system at DSA.

Publicity

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was his Department's expenditure on consultants to assist with information, publicity, press and media in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1993–94. [3580]

Mr. Bowis: The information is as follows:

Press and Media

1993–94: £707,000

1994–95: £330,000

1995–96: £930,000.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery (Feasibility Studies)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many feasibility studies have been funded from the proceeds of the national lottery; at what cost; and how many have produced completed projects. [3988]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 14 November 1996]: To date, the national lottery distributing bodies have made 168 awards for feasibility studies for a total of £15,313,311. Many of these are still being carried out, and some will have resulted in full applications which will need to be considered by the distributing bodies. My officials have asked the distributing bodies to confirm how many of these studies have produced completed projects and will write to the hon. Member with this information.

Sex and Violence

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what discussions she has had with television, satellite and cable companies regarding the introduction of a non-statutory system for publicly rating their television output for sex and violence; [3541]

(2) if she will make it her policy to encourage television, satellite and cable companies to introduce a system for publishing a rating for sex and violence with their television schedules. [3542]

Mr. Sproat: As part of its research into the V-chip, the Department has consulted broadcasters and other organisations, including those representing viewers, on the feasibility and desirability of a ratings system for television programmes. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also expects to explore this and other ideas with the chairmen of the BBC, the Independent Television Commission and the Broadcasting Standards Council when she meets them next month to discuss public concern about violence on television.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Local Councillors (Benefits)

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proposals he has to extend the UB40 exclusion of basic allowances to apply to income support for people who serve on local authorities; and if he will make a statement; [3181]

(2) what plans he has to update the benefits payable to people who are elected to local councils and are unemployed; [3182]

Mr. Roger Evans: We have no plans to change the rules that currently apply to local authority councillors who are receiving income support or jobseeker's allowance.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people are currently receiving housing benefit in the United Kingdom; and what is the breakdown of these figures by region or local authority. [3803]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information relating to Great Britain has been placed in the Library.

I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for the Northern Ireland figures.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost to the Government of funding housing benefit in the current year; and if he will make a statement. [3804]

Mr. Evans: The information is set out in the table.

Planned cost to central government of housing benefit 1996–97

Expenditure type	Amount £ million
Rent allowances	5,135
Discretionary rent allowances	18
Non-HRA rent rebates	87
Rent rebates (England)	3,114
Rent rebates (Wales)	192
Rent rebates (Scotland)	531
Administration	186
Anti-fraud incentives	22
Challenge funding	8
Total	9,293

Fishermen

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what entitlement fishermen from other member states have for (a) social security or (b) unemployment benefit while in the United Kingdom; and how many such claims have been dealt with in the last 12 months. [3657]

Mr. Roger Evans: Only fishermen from other member states who have paid United Kingdom national insurance contributions would have entitlement to United Kingdom contributory benefits, including contribution-based jobseeker's allowance.

Fishermen from other member states would qualify for income-related benefits available to unemployed people, including income-based jobseeker's allowance only if they were habitually resident in the United Kingdom.

We have no information on the number of claims made by fishermen from member states.

Benefits Agency (Emergency Services)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons the Benefits Agency out-of-office hours emergency telephone service in Bradford was closed before a national review of the service had been completed; what consultations took place before the Bradford emergency service closed; if he will restore the emergency service in Bradford; and if he will make a statement. [4133]

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Max Madden, dated 14 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for what reasons the Benefits Agency out-of-hours emergency telephone service in Bradford closed down before a national review of the service had been completed; what consultations took place before the Bradford emergency closed; if he will restore the emergency service in Bradford; and if he will make a statement.

There has been no closure of the Out-of-Hours Service in the Bradford area. The service continues to operate from Monday to Sunday and for the four week period ended 3.11.96 there were 63 referrals.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Ian McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what have been the costs incurred by his Department in publicising the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance, by region. [3919]

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on 14 November, Official Report, column 338.

War Pensions

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many London boroughs (a) fully and (b) partially disregard war pensions when assessing housing benefit. [3889]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not collected centrally. Any decision concerning the enhancement of the mandatory disregards of a war disablement pension or war widow's pension is entirely for individual local authorities.

HEALTH

Human Blood and Blood Products

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the costs of (a) collecting, (b) testing, (c) processing and (d) storing human blood and human blood products; and what studies he has commissioned to establish the costs involved. [3422]

Mr. Horam: These are matters for the National Blood Authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman, Sir Colin Walker.

Prescribing Practices

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is issued to general practitioners by (a) his Department and (b) health authority pharmaceutical advisers in cases where branded medicine is available only by private prescription and a patient suffers adverse reactions to the generic alternatives.[3423]

Mr. Malone: No specific guidance is issued. Clinicians may prescribe any medication available on the national health service which is appropriate to meet patients' needs. Where products are not prescribable, alternatives are available to meet clinical needs. Any adverse reaction to a product would normally be expected in both a branded product and a generic equivalent.

GPs (Payments for Elderly Patients)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response he is making to the British Medical

Association's proposals that GPs should seek extra payments in respect of elderly patients in care homes. [3765]

Mr. Malone: The Department regularly meets the British Medical Association to discuss relevant matters including the remuneration system for general practitioners.

Hospitals (Leeds)

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the capital spending on hospitals in Leeds in each year since 1980. [3865]

Mr. Horam: Information available centrally on capital schemes with a value over £1 million shows that, since 1980, we have invested over £133 million to improve health facilities in Leeds. This figure does not include spending on smaller schemes or block capital spending.

Public Expenditure

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of gross domestic product public expenditure on health constitutes in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Germany, (c) France, (d) Spain, (e) Switzerland, (f) United States of America and (g) Japan. [3884]

Mr. Malone: National health service expenditure in the United Kingdom in 1995–96 was £41,292 million—forecast outturn—which is 5.8 per cent. of gross domestic product. The Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development publishes figures for health spending, but these are not on a fully comparable basis.

MRSA

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what requirement there is on NHS trusts to notify cases in their hospitals of methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus; and in how many hospitals cases have been reported in the last 10 years. [3922]

Mr. Horam: There is no requirement on national health service trusts to notify cases of methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus—MRSA. However, the public health laboratory service maintains aggregate data on MRSA as part of its national surveillance of communicable disease and infection.

Smoking-related Diseases

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the annual cost to the NHS of smoking-related diseases. [3933]

Mr. Horam: Treatment costs to the national health service are not available on a year-by-year basis. Based on 1990 figures, the Health Education Authority's report "The Smoking Epidemic—A Prescription for Change" estimated that the annual cost to the NHS of treating smoking-related diseases is £610 million.

Ambulance Services (Yorkshire)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to evaluate the comparative records of providers of ambulance services in North Yorkshire, Humberside and West Yorkshire. [4001]

Mr. Horam: The performance of all national health service trusts is monitored by the NHS executive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to investigate allegations concerning the ambulance service in North Yorkshire made in the Channel 4 "Despatches" programme of 14 November a transcript of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement. [4159]

Mr. Horam: The national health service executive and North Yorkshire Ambulance Service NHS trust will review the contents of this programme and consider any action as appropriate.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3800]

Mr. John M. Taylor: According to central records, my Department has not placed any contracts with EDS since 1985, although orders for IT goods have been placed under the Government catalogue—GCAT—contract with CCTA let with EDS earlier this year.

Opencast Coal Mining

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the (i) size, (ii) tonnage and (iii) depth conditions of each licence issued by the Coal Authority for opencast mining in each of the last five years, giving in each case the location by Parliamentary constituency. [3929]

Mr. Page: A list of opencast sites and their location was provided in my answer to the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. Clapham) on 11 November 1996, Official Report, columns 16-17. Specific licence data are a matter for the Coal Authority.

UKAEA (Loans)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what factors led him to terminate the loans to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority under the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (Extinguishing of Liabilities) Order 1996. [4147]

Mr. Richard Page [holding answer 14 November 1996]: The loans in question were taken out from the national loans fund by the UK Atomic Energy Authority following the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1986, which enabled it to act as a trading fund, borrowing to finance its commercial activities and servicing the loans out of commercial revenues. Following the successful privatisation of the commercial parts of the authority as AEA Technology plc on 26 September 1996, the remaining authority exists principally to manage nuclear decommissioning and radioactive wastes. My Department now provides most of its funding, and the authority does not have the independent commercial profits that would be needed to service the loans. No purpose would be served by our using public expenditure to enable the authority to service national loans fund loans. We therefore extinguished the loans, which we were able to do under the powers given last year by the Atomic Energy Authority Act 1995 because the sale proceeds from the privatisation of AEA Technology plc were larger than the total of the outstanding loans and commencing capital debt of the authority.

DEFENCE

Contaminated Land

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what environmental impact assessment has been conducted in respect of contaminated land at (a) RAF Lakenheath, (b) RAF Molesworth, (c) RAF Valley, (d) RAF Aberporth, (e) RAF Brawdy, (f) RAF St. Athan, (g) Llangennech and Brecon barracks and (h) RAF Caerwent. [3835]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 November, Official Report, column 219.

Depleted Uranium Shells

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities have been used for the construction of depleted uranium shells; and what environmental audit has been conducted at these facilities since 1979. [3924]

Mr. Soames: My Department possesses no facilities for the construction of depleted uranium ammunition. In 1982, my Department developed the royal ordnance speciality materials facility at Featherstone, near Wolverhampton, for the manufacture of depleted uranium components for 120mm main battle tank ammunition. The manufacture of Challenger 1 components was carried out there between 1985 and 1990. Former royal ordnance factories Birtley, County Durham, and Glascoed, Gwent, were involved in the assembly of those components into full rounds.

The speciality materials facility became part of Royal Ordnance plc in 1989. It is now owned by British Aerospace plc. Throughout its operational life, the facility has followed National Radiological Protection Board advice and fully complied with legislation on radiological site licensing, including environmental audit. Information on the environmental audit records for the speciality materials facility, RO(Birtley) and RO(Glascoed) is a matter for Royal Ordnance plc.

Radium Luminising

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's programme to clean up and restore sites where radium luminising has taken place, indicating the location of each site, the steps taken to decontaminate the site and the cost to date of restoration work. [3979]

Mr. Soames: Radium luminising took place during the 1940s and 1950s prior to the introduction of controls under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. No record of facilities or sites specifically engaged in this work were therefore maintained, but where past practices involving the use of radium luminised materials have resulted in contamination of the site, this is addressed as part of the land quality assessment—LQA—process with decontamination being undertaken where necessary.

A prioritised LQA programme for the Defence estate is being prepared, with high priorities assigned to sites where there are plans for significant change of use, including sale, or where contamination is suspected. Where radium contamination is identified in an LQA, the need for clean-up and remediation will be determined, taking into account the future use of the site. This will be undertaken on a case-by-case basis.

The steps to decontaminate a site will depend on the circumstances, but in all cases such work is in accordance with relevant legislation. Contaminated arisings are disposed of in accordance with letters of agreement issued by the environmental agencies and their predecessors.

The cost restoration work could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

RAF Stafford

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of radioactive materials are currently stored at RAF Stafford; what plans have been developed for the disposal of this material; what are the estimated costs of the storage and disposal of the materials; and what environmental audit his Department has conducted of the site. [3984]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

RAF Carlisle

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which sites the contaminated wastes removed from RAF Carlisle have been taken; in what way the wastes were packed and transported; what environmental assessment has been conducted of the disposal sites in regard to their long-term security; what has been the cost to date of the decontamination programme at RAF Carlisle; when he expects it to be completed; and at what final cost. [3920]

Mr. Soames: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Special Air Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the shortfall at 1 November in the Special Air Service. [4068]

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 January 1996, Official Report, column 735.

Female Service Personnel

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many female service personnel were in the armed forces on 1 October 1991 and 1 October 1996. [4451]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency, DASA, under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Dr. David Clark, dated 15 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question to the Secretary of State for the Armed Forces about the number of female service personnel in the armed forces as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency.

The number of female service personnel in the armed forces on 1 October 1991 is 19,262.

The number of female service personnel in the armed forces on 1 October 1996 is 15,259. This figure does not include 494 females serving in the Royal Irish Regiment—in 1991 such personnel were members of the Ulster Defence Force for which no details are available.

This information is published monthly by Defence Analytical Services Agency in Tri-Service Personnel Statistics (TSP)1 and is available in the House of Commons library.

Dr. Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many female officers are currently in the armed forces. [4427]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Defence Analytical Services Agency—DASA—under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Dr. David Clark, dated 15 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question to the Secretary of State for the Armed Forces about the number of female officers in the armed forces as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency.

The most recent return of armed forces personnel strength is at situation date 1 October 1996. The number of female officers in the armed forces at 1 October 1996 is 2,398. This figure does not include 17 female officers serving in the Royal Irish Regiment.

This information is published monthly by Defence Analytical Services Agency in Tri-Service Personnel Statistics (TSP)1 and is available in the House of Commons library.

Channel Islands (War-time Occupation)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 113, on records relating to the war-time occupation of the Channel Islands, if he will make a statement on the particular contents of the files to be made available at the Public Record Office; and what factors underlay the delay in their release. [4428]

Mr. Soames: The files to be released are already held by the Public Record Office and the information sought will be readily gleaned from an examination of the papers on their release next week. The files in question were originally closed under the provisions of the Public Record Act 1958 for reasons of personal sensitivity. That sensitivity having lapsed, the files are now being released under the open government initiative.

Tanks

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the techniques and equipment used by the armed services to transport tanks. [4426]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Defence Transport and Movements Executive—DTMX—under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Hodson to Dr. David Clark, dated 15 November 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about the transportation of tanks, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive Agency.

Main Battle Tanks (MBTs) may be moved by three means: road, rail and sea, depending on the location and destination. Within the UK, transportation is by road, either on military owned and operated tank transporters or, when Service resources are fully tasked, by commercial heavy lift hauliers. Rail cannot be utilized due to the limitations of the UK 'loading gauge'.

On the continent, MBTs are moved by both road and rail. Military tank transporters are used within Germany but their axle weights exceed the limits for the Low Countries and there, commercial road hauliers or rail are employed. Train movement may comprise just individual tanks or an entire squadron of tanks and other armoured vehicles, and be on either military or commercial rolling stock.

MBTs move by sea to other parts of the world, e.g. Canada, where they are on-moved by rail. The vessels can be either Service or commercial, chartered from the international market. The preferred type is the Roll-on/Roll-off (Ro Ro), as this allows for quicker loading and discharge, compared to the Lift-on/Lift-off (Lo Lo) freighters.

Royal Navy

Mr. Dover: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the role of the Royal Navy will be affected by withdrawal from Hong Kong. [4493]

Mr. Soames: The UK's wider interest in security in the region will not diminish when the sovereignty of Hong Kong is transferred to China next year. The Royal Navy will continue to deploy to the far east, as it has done traditionally. In addition to our continuing commitment to the five powers defence agreement—FPDA—we will continue our programme of bilateral defence contacts with our friends in the region.

Reserve Forces Call-out

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons those members of the reserve forces whose main qualifications are in transporting nuclear weapons have been sent letters asking them to volunteer to be considered for call-out for service in the former Republic of Yugoslavia. [4291]

Mr. Soames: Volunteers from the reserve forces, in particular the Territorial Army, continue to make a significant contribution in support of British operations in the former Yugoslavia. In line with this, volunteers are being sought to fill eight posts in December this year for which the driver qualification C + E—heavy goods vehicles—is required. Letters have therefore been sent to some 50 members of the Regular Reserve who hold this qualification. There is no specific qualification within the British Army relating to the transport of nuclear weapons, and none of those to whom letters have been sent were selected on the basis of previous experience in this field.

Armed Forces (Deaths)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces have died in each of the last five years. [4422]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Defence Analytical Services Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Paul Altobell to Dr. David Clark, dated 15 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of service personnel who have died since 1991 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of Defence Analytical Services Agency.

The number of tri-service deaths (including Gurkhas) reported to DASA as at 13 November 1996 is as follows:

Year	Army	Navy	RAF
1991	192	53	65
1992	155	48	64
1993	133	44	64
1994	130	37	52
1995	114	31	62
1996[1]	69	20	32
Total	773	233	339

[1] Reported up to 13 November 1996.

Army Recruitment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current year's recruitment targets for each Army regiment. [4423]

Mr. Soames: Recruiting targets are set not by regiment, but by arm and service. In the case of the infantry, soldier targets are set by divisions of infantry. The targets for 1996–97 are shown in the table:

Arm/service	Officers	Soldiers	Apprentices
H Cav/RAC	69	800	—
RA	88	1,400	—

Training Areas

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the training areas available for use by British forces in the world. [4425]

Mr. Soames: I shall write to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

ENVIRONMENT

House Building (South-East)

Mr. Renton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to revise the predict and provide assumption for house building in the south-east of England. [3096]

Mr. Clappison: One of the objectives of the town and country planning system is to provide houses in a way which is consistent with sustainable development. In planning for future housing, and where it should go, planning authorities need to look 10 to 15 years ahead. Projections of future household formation are just one of the factors that need to be considered by the regional planning conferences when advising the Secretary of State on future housing requirements to be included in regional planning guidance. These figures are subsequently tested in development plans. The process, therefore, is not one of predict and provide.

Restricting the amount of additional housing to reduce consumption would make housing more expensive and mean that those on medium and low incomes were less able to afford a satisfactory quality of housing. There is little evidence that the availability of housing leads people to set up new households: social factors appear to be stronger.

The Government recognise that development pressures have been most intense in the south-east. The need to steer growth towards previously developed land and areas in need of economic regeneration, and to take advantage of the increasing European orientation of the regional economy, has led the Government to produce sub-regional planning guidance in the form of the Thames gateway planning framework. The Government are also committed to the target set in the housing White Paper—that, by 2005, half of all new homes will be built on reused sites.

The Government are also looking at policies which could reduce the impact or pattern of household formation on the current planning policies for housing and will shortly be publishing a Green Paper to take this discussion forward.

Household and Household Structure Projections

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has commissioned into the reliability of future household and household structure projections, with particular reference to changes in external immigration assumptions. [3065]

Mr. Clappison: The most recent household projections have been subject to considerable public scrutiny since their publication in March 1995, in particular by the Environment Committee in evidence for its report on housing need. While generally endorsing the projections, the Committee recommended that the Department continue to examine the extent to which household formation is affected by economic and social factors. This is currently being addressed in a research project with the department of applied economics, Cambridge university, the results of which should be available early in the new year.

One of the assumptions underlying the household projections concerns the future pattern of migration between England and the rest of the world. In recent years, international migration has departed from established patterns and become increasingly variable from year to year. Against this background, in 1992 the Government Actuary's Department, in collaboration with other Departments, undertook a thorough review of the methods used to set international migration assumptions. This led to a new methodology which was used for the first time in the preparation of the 1991-based national population projections. As with previous projections, the assumed level of migration over the projection period takes into account information from a run of previous years in order to even out the fluctuations from year to year. The robustness of sources of information on migration is kept under regular review by the Office for National Statistics.

Packaging Waste

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to meet representatives of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents to discuss the directive on producer responsibility for packaging waste; and if he will make a statement; [3666]

(2) what steps he is taking to mitigate the impact of the directive on producer responsibility on packaging waste on small businesses with particular reference to newsagents; and if he will make a statement. [3665]

Mr. Clappison: We published in July a consultation document and draft regulations which would require businesses in the packaging chain to contribute on a shared basis to the recycling and recovery targets for waste packaging set by the EC directive on packaging and packaging waste. Among other issues, we sought views on the proposed treatment of small businesses that might be affected on such matters as the size of threshold proposed and whether it should be expressed in terms of turnover as well as, or in place of, packaging handled and an alternative means of assisting recycling and recovery. The National Federation of Retail Newsagents was one of over 100 trade associations and industry bodies to give us its views. I understand that the federation has also met my officials. We shall take the views of all those concerned into account in considering the final form of regulations.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he proposes to report on the packaging waste regulations; and if he will make a statement; [3658]

(2) what replies he has received to the consultation document published by his Department on waste packaging; and if he will make a statement; [3660]

(3) if he will make a statement on the packaging materials currently used by United Kingdom industry; and if he will indicate the percentage of each which require to be recycled to achieve his targets. [3661]

Mr. Clappison: My Department proposes to bring forward the Producer Responsibility Obligations (Packaging Waste) Regulations for the House to consider in the very near future. On 11 July, we issued for consultation draft proposals to be contained in the regulations; 6,000 copies were circulated, initially to an established list of consultees consisting of businesses, trade bodies, local authorities, consumer groups and individuals. A further 5,000 copies were distributed on request and leaflets summarising the proposal were sent to over 50,000 businesses, together with 8,000 computer discs to illustrate the principles involved. More than 40 events were held with industry and trade bodies to explain the proposals and the role of collective business schemes such as VALPAK. My Department has received 448 responses, of which 100 were from trade bodies from the materials and other sectors most closely concerned, which together represent over 53,000 member businesses.

The principal packaging materials currently used UK industries are glass, paper/board, plastics, aluminium and steel. The United Kingdom is required, by 2001 to have recycled a minimum of 15 per cent. by weight of each material and to recover 50 per cent. of all packaging waste. In practice, most of this is likely to be by materials recycling.

Natural Environment Research Council

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the Natural Environment Research Council's terrestrial initiative in global environmental research—TIGER—programme; and what plans he has to commit new resources to the initiative. [4126]

Mr. Clappison: The terrestrial initiative in global environmental research—TIGER—is funded by the Natural Environment Research Council. It is, therefore, for the council to assess the effectiveness of its own programme, and to consider the case for supporting further work in the same field.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will issue a reworked index of local conditions to cover authorities which have had major boundary changes. [4052]

Mr. Clappison: The Department intends to let a contract in December of this year which will include adjusting the index of local conditions to reflect all major local authority boundary changes. The work will also involve updating the non-census-based indicators where more up-to-date statistical information is available. The results of this work will be available in the Summer 1997.

Capital Challenge

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the local authority associations concerning capital challenge; and if he will make a statement. [3087]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration met the leaders of the local authority associations on 18 March to discuss their response to the Government's proposals for a pilot scheme. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State holds regular meetings with the local authority association chairmen, at which progress with the capital challenge pilot has been raised.

North Sea Conference

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made in ensuring that (a) fisheries conservation and (b) industrial fishing in particular is put on the agenda of the intermediate ministerial meeting of the North sea conference. [4102]

Mr. Clappison: The North sea intermediate ministerial meeting is to consider all aspects of fisheries and the environment. The UK delegation to the preparatory meetings has made it clear that both fisheries conservation and industrial fisheries should be specifically considered.

Public Income and Expenditure (London)

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the consultation paper on public income and expenditure in London. [4998]

Mr. Gummer: I have today placed a copy of this consultation paper entitled "Public Finances in London—Methods and Estimates" in the Library of the House. Copies have been sent to a number of London organisations for comment.

SCOTLAND

Knives (Assaults)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many assaults with knives there were in Scotland in the last five years. [3384]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the total number of assaults with knives in that period is not available. The combined number of recorded victims of homicide and in-patient discharges from Scottish hospitals as a result of assaults with a knife or pointed article in the five years from and including 1991 was 6,664. The table gives a breakdown of this figure.

	In-patient discharges from Scottish hospitals with a diagnosis of injury (excluding death) resulting from an assault by a cutting or piercing instrument	Number of victims of homicide recorded by the police in Scotland in which a knife or sharp instrument was used	Total
1992	1,486	70	1,556
1993	988	44	1,032
1994	1,191	58	1,249
1995	1,526	59	1,585
Total	6,399	265	6,664

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3818]

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: The Scottish Office has had no contracts with EDS since 1985.

Argyll and the Islands Enterprise

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list the total number of (a) grants and (b) loans paid to Mondial Business Information Systems and Channel 11 Ltd. by Argyll and the Islands Enterprise; and when these sums were paid; [4176]

(2) what conditions were attached to the (a) grants and (b) loans paid to Mondial Business Information Systems and Channel 11 Ltd. by Argyll and the Islands Enterprise; [4175]

(3) what measures were undertaken by Argyll and the Islands Enterprise to assess the suitability of Mondial Business Information Systems and Channel 11 Ltd. to receive public money; and if he will make a statement. [4178]

Mr. Kynoch: Argyll and the Islands Enterprise operates under contract with Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I shall ask the chairman of the latter organisation to write to the hon. Member.

Enterprise Companies

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what standard guidelines are in place for Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies regarding the assessment of (a) the suitability of companies for public investment and (b) the safeguards which should be taken when investing in ventures considered high risk. [4177]

Mr. Kynoch: Highlands and Islands Enterprise, and its network of local enterprise companies, are required to operate in accordance with a management statement and a manual of project and programme rules which offer guidance on the financial, strategic and operational framework within which the organisations operate. The importance of appraisal, including—where the success of a case or project depends upon the commercial viability of an enterprise—the need to undertake a separate financial appraisal of that enterprise and its prospects, as well as the need for an assessment of the risks and uncertainty associated with particular cases or projects, is emphasised in various parts of these documents.

Scottish Enterprise and its network of local enterprise companies operate under a similar regime.

Sandeels

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to the answer of 7 November, Official Report, column 661, when he expects the research project into industrial sandeel fisheries to report. [4160]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The international research project to study the impact of industrial sandeel fisheries on predator species off the east coast of Scotland is expected to take three years. A report to the European Commission is likely to be made in the latter half of 1999.

BSE

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the desirability of providing financial aid and incentives to encourage rural local authorities to set up specific local exchange trading schemes to help farmers during the BSE crisis; and if he will make a statement. [2311]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 7 November 1996]: We have received no representations to set up local exchange trading schemes. We would expect rural local authorities to take the initiative themselves if they considered there was a need in their areas.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rabies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment his Department has made of the potential rabies threat to the United Kingdom arising from changes in the regulations to control rabies in France. [3448]

Mrs. Browning: New regulations in France provide for a programme of oral vaccination of foxes which, in practice, has been operational for the past seven years. The number of French départments deemed infested with rabies has fallen from 36 in 1991 to 22 in 1996. The Government note however that rabies is still present in France and believes that measures to keep the UK rabies-free remain essential.

Mr. Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will assess the implications for United Kingdom rabies control policy of trends in the import of domestic dogs and cats into Sweden since 1994. [3449]

Mrs. Browning: We will be taking account of the trends in the import of domestic dogs and cats into Sweden since 1994 as part of the review of rabies policy, announced in my reply of 5 November 1996 to the hon. Member for Glanford and Scunthorpe (Mr. Morley), Official Report, column 488.

Animal Feed (Bees)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the percentage of (a) bovine feeding stuff and (b) pet food which is made up of bees; and if he will make a statement. [3506]

Mrs. Browning: I am not aware that any bovine feeding stuff or pet food incorporates bees as an ingredient.

Cattle Slaughter Scheme

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what provisions he ordered abattoirs to take 75 per cent. of cull cows and 50 per cent. of clean cattle from livestock markets. [4254]

Mr. Baldry: This measure was brought in to help ensure the smooth running of the over-30-month scheme by improving access for producers and preserving historic patterns of trade. It is provided for by article 3 of EC regulation 716/96, which requires the United Kingdom to adopt all necessary measures to ensure proper application of the scheme.

Scrapie

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of scrapie were notified to Ministry officials (a) during 1995 and (b) between January and October 1995 under the terms of Specific Diseases (Notification and Slaughter) Order 1992. [4253]

Mrs. Browning: In 1995, 163 cases of scrapie were notified in Great Britain. Of these, 151 were confirmed as positive during the months January to October inclusive.

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the subject of dietary supplements was last considered by the Codex Alimentarius Committee; and what policy was pursued by the British Government representatives in relation to dietary supplements at these meetings. [3101]

Mrs. Browning: The subject of dietary supplements was last considered by codex at the beginning of October this year, when further consideration was given to proposed guidelines for dietary supplements containing vitamins and minerals. The UK delegation at the meeting sought to ensure that draft guidelines reflected the approach currently taken in the UK.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what funding has been made available under section 11 in each year since 1995; what funding provision has been made for (a) 1996–97 and (b) 1997–98; how many section 11 teachers are currently employed; and what estimate he has made of the number of section 11 teachers who will be employed in 1997–98; [4077]

(2) what representations his Department has received regarding (a) delays in announcing the future of section 11 funding, (b) reductions in section 11 teachers and (c) the role of section 11 for raising achievement levels among pupils with English as a second language.[4076]

Mr. Kirkhope: Not all the information requested is available.

In 1995–96, Home Office expenditure—not including projects transferred to the single regeneration budget—under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 was £54 million. Current provision for 1996–97 is £58 million. The number of approved posts specifically designated as to be filled by qualified teachers is currently 3,750 in full-time equivalent terms.

In recent months, we have received a substantial number of representations, in writing or by telephone, which sought information about the funding position from next April onwards, and urged that there should be no reduction in current levels of funding.

On 13 November, Official Report, column 242, I announced that, despite other pressures on public expenditure, the current overall level of funding would be maintained until 31 August 1998. This will include projects originally approved under section 11 but at present funded under the single regeneration budget. Subject to a very small number of changes related to current projects for which alternative funding has already been secured, or which were not intended to be funded beyond next March, we would expect the number of approved posts to remain much the same.

Television Licences

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been imprisoned in 1996 to date for defaulting on a fine arising from their non-payment of television licences; what was the figure for the same period in 1995; and what assessment he has made of the use of imprisonment in respect of television licence fee evaders. [2743]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Dafydd Wigley, dated 18 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question asking, how many people have been imprisoned in 1996 to date for defaulting on a fine arising from their non-payment of television licences; for the figure for the same period in 1995; and for an assessment of the use of imprisonment in respect of television licence fee evaders.

Provisional information for the period January to September 1996 shows that 262 people were received into prison for defaulting on a fine after conviction for using a television without a licence. This is against 599 received during the same period in 1995, indicating a significant drop in the use of imprisonment.

Juvenile Criminal Justice System

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the juvenile criminal justice system. [2873]

Mr. Maclean: The Government have introduced a number of measures to improve the juvenile criminal justice system. These include strengthening the courts' powers for dealing with young offenders by increasing maximum sentence for youth custody for 15 to 17-year-olds, by introducing long periods of detention for 10 to 13-year-olds for serious offences and providing a new sentence for persistent 12 to 14-year-old offenders.

New standards have been introduced for the supervision of young offenders in the community, as well as new criteria for cautioning. Amendments to the Crime (Sentences) Bill will pave the way for extending electronic monitoring of curfew orders to 10 to 15-year-olds, and giving youth courts the discretion to allow identification of juveniles convicted of an offence.

In addition, the Government will be publishing shortly a Green Paper on preventing young people most at risk of offending from becoming involved in crime.

Passport Checks

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department from which countries passengers arriving in the United Kingdom are asked for their passports in the walkway immediately upon leaving the aircraft. [4769]

Mr. Kirkhope: Passengers from any country may be subject to checks by immigration officers stationed at the exit from the aircraft.

Gambling Legislation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which London borough councils in the docklands area he consulted before issuing his proposals published on 12 November for modifications of gambling legislation in selected areas in England and Wales; and what additional statutory provisions relating to defining the selected areas and specifying the regulations applying to them he plans when implementing these proposals. [4703]

Mr. Kirkhope: Our first consultation paper on casinos, published in February 1996, did not propose casino permitted area status for docklands.

We subsequently added them to the proposed list in our second consultation paper in the light of representations from the London borough of Tower Hamlets and other local interests.

We have sought views on our fresh proposals from relevant local authorities including the London boroughs of Tower Hamlets and Newham, and have sent a copy to Southwark.

We will reach final decisions on the choice of new permitted areas and the statutory provisions after the consultation period finishes on 31 January.

ENVIRONMENT

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3797]

Sir Paul Beresford: My Department currently has no contracts with EDS. Information on contracts completed prior to 1995 together with full information on the Department's agencies and associated bodies is obtainable only at disproportionate cost.

The following contracts were completed in 1995:

Year of inception	Contract value £	Modifications
1992	358,000	Three—one at the company's request and two at DOE's request
1995	30,000	None
1995	6,000	None

No job reductions resulted as the contracts did not cover in-house tasks that were being outsourced.

Marine Environmental Pollution

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the European Community directives relating to the requirement to carry out (a) environmental impact assessments and (b) environmental audits, applying to areas of the seabed between member states of the European Union in circumstances where states assess environmental contamination may have arisen in a specific location. [3834]

Sir Paul Beresford: There are no EC directives requiring either environmental impact assessment or environmental audit for the seabed between member states in the specific circumstances where member states assess that environmental contamination of that seabed may have occurred.

European Union (Labour Conditions)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the European Union member countries by order of (a) fatality rate of workers and (b) maximum working hours. [4110]

Sir Paul Beresford: The latest available information is given in the following tables:

(a) Fatality rates per 100,000 employees/self-employed

Country	Year	Fatality rate
Netherlands	1991	0.80
Great Britain	1993	1.20
Finland	1993	2.00

Planning Appeals

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average current period taken for the consideration of planning appeals; and what assessment he has made of the manpower levels of the Planning Inspectorate. [4119]

Sir Paul Beresford: Responsibility for the provision of information on performance on the processing of planning appeals has been delegated to the Planning Inspectorate under its chief executive Mr. Chris Shepley. The agency is therefore responding to the question.

Letter from J. Greenfield to Sir Dudley Smith, dated 15 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for the Environment has asked me to reply to your Question about the time taken to process planning appeals and the assessment of manpower levels in the Inspectorate.

Inspectors determine planning appeals by one of three procedures: written representations; hearing; and public inquiry. The time in weeks to determine 80 per cent of appeals by each procedure for the period 1 April to 30 September 1996 is shown in the table below:

Procedure	Time to determine 80 per cent. of appeals (weeks)
Written representations	25
Hearing	46
Public inquiry	56

The agency has been set the target of achieving a significant improvement in performance handling planning appeals over the three years ending in March 1999. To achieve the level of performance required and keep abreast of the agency's other work, 33 inspectors were recruited in 1995 and a further 31 this year.

Freedom of the Cities and Trust Councils Initiatives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the documents published by his Department relating to the (a) freedom of the cities and (b) trust councils initiatives. [4121]

Sir Paul Beresford: There are no such documents.

Health and Safety

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many official speeches he has made specifically on health and safety since his Department took over responsibilities of the Health and Safety Executive. [4122]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend is responsible for a very wide range of subjects. He has addressed the launch of the Health and Safety Commission's noise at work campaign and a conference on inspection for health. As Minister with particular responsibility for health and safety at work, I have made a number of speeches on this subject and will continue to do so.

Opencast Mining

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has made in respect of tighter environmental rules for opencasting to the European Commission; and if he will make a statement. [3915]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Building Research Establishment

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 104, on the Building Research Establishment, if he will list the criteria which were specified in April for the future operation of the Building Research Establishment. [4519]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend's 2 April statement did not specify criteria as such, but it made clear that BRE should remain a single entity in the private sector. This was because BRE offers a unique range of complementary skills and technologies, and fragmentation would both substantially increase costs to customers and reduce efficiency.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the bidders for the Building Research Establishment. [4570]

Mr. Jones: The competitive sale of BRE is being conducted on a two-stage basis. We shall first be considering indicative bids from parties who have pre-qualified as potential purchasers, and subsequently final bids from a short list of these. We shall be treating information about bids and bidders as commercially confidential until a preferred purchaser is identified early in 1997.

Construction Skills Certification

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 103, on construction skills certification, what plans he has to encourage the registration of building operatives under the construction skills certificate scheme. [4520]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State spoke at the launch of the scheme and we continue actively to support it.

Hedgerows

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy not to seek to destroy or weaken the protection recently afforded to enclosure and hedgerows by the courts. [4104]

Mr. Clappison: The Government published draft regulations for the protection of important hedgerows on 21 October 1996. As I explained in the answer that I gave to the hon. Member on 15 October 1996, Official Report, column 844, these regulations will not override restrictions imposed by other enactments or agreements, including enclosure awards. I understand that a judgment is still awaited in respect of the protection afforded to enclosure hedgerows in the case referred to.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Attorney-General how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3817]

The Attorney-General: The Departments and agencies for which I am responsible have not entered into any contracts with Electronic Data Systems Ltd.

TREASURY

Deregulation

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what regulations his Department proposes to repeal by the end of 1996; if he proposes to conduct a compliance cost assessment on each regulation repealed; and what is the estimated cost of undertaking a compliance cost assessment to determine the advantages and disadvantages of each repeal; [1393]

(2) if he will list the rules and regulations he proposes to repeal or amend by means of a reference to the Deregulation Committee before the end of 1996; and if he will make a statement. [2913]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 November 1996]: The Treasury has consulted on the following proposals for use of the deregulation order-making power. The timing of any reference to the Deregulation Committee will depend on various factors, including the outcome of consultation.

Industrial Assurance Acts 1923 and 1948

Trustee Investments Act 1961.

In addition, the Chancellor's departments have completed consultation on the following measures, which are now subject to consideration by the Deregulation Committees of both Houses:

Treasury

Deregulation (Bills of Exchange) Order

Office for National Statistics

Deregulation (Validity of Civil Preliminaries to Marriage) Order.

Since the effect in each of the above cases will be to reduce, rather than increase, compliance costs, a compliance cost assessment will not be required. Departments do, however, seek to estimate approximate savings wherever possible. The cost of undertaking a CCA varies from case to case, but is generally modest. Because part of the cost falls on the businesses consulted, a full CCA would be inappropriate for measures designed to reduce business burdens.

Sterling

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the change in the value of the pound sterling against (a) the deutschmark, (b) the French franc, (c) the ecu and (d) the US dollar since January 1996; and if he will make a statement on the impact on the economy of fluctuations in (a) to (d); [3985]

(2) what measures he is taking to ensure a stable external value for sterling for export purposes. [3905]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Between 1 January 1996 and 12 November 1996, sterling has risen by (a) 11 per cent. against the deutschmark, (b) 9 per cent. against the French franc, (c) 6 per cent. against the ecu and (d) 6 per cent. against the US dollar. The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate but do not have a target for sterling. The exchange rate is only one of many factors which must be taken into account in setting policy.

Partnership and Closed Company Registrations

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) partnerships and (b) closed companies are registered with the Inland Revenue for tax purposes. [3904]

Mr. Jack: At the latest count, the Inland Revenue was dealing with approximately 650,000 partnerships, and an estimate of around 800,000 non-dormant close companies.

PRIME MINISTER

European Summit

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received in relation to the location of the summit meeting during the next United Kingdom presidency of the Council of Ministers of the European Union. [4129]

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister when he estimates Her Majesty's Government will decide its preferred venue for the 1998 European Union summit. [4070]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has expressed support for Cardiff as a possible location for the June 1998 European Council. I am also aware of early-day motion 173 which also proposes Cardiff. An announcement will be made in due course.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a copy of his response to the letter from Friendship across Frontiers, signed by the chairman, Riad El Taher, on 6 November, about the mortality rate of Iraqi children, and the UNICEF report. [4391]

The Prime Minister: So far as I am aware, my office has not yet received this letter.

Tigris and Euphrates Valleys

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what response Her Majesty's Government have given to the Secretary General of the Arab League's representations about the humanitarian situation in the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates. [4465]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 15 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, discussed the humanitarian situation in Iraq during the Secretary General's visit to London in May 1996, and in Cairo in June 1996, raising in particular Saddam Hussein's indifference to the suffering of the Iraqi people. Saddam Hussein continues to delay implementation of UN Security Council resolution 986 by attempting to renegotiate issues already with the UN. Like the Arab League, we want SCR 986 implemented as soon as possible; it will bring much needed relief to millions of Iraqis.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Child Protection (Wars)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to protect children in wars where the United Kingdom has an aid interest. [4263]

Dr. Liam Fox: The Government have provided considerable humanitarian aid in a careful and targeted way in many war situations overseas. Support for children's needs is a high priority in all cases, delivered through agencies like the Red Cross, UNICEF and specialists such as the Save the Children Fund and Children's Aid Direct. Projects have benefited health, nutrition, orphan care, education, deprived families and family reunification.

Sudan

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the current need of the population of Sudan for international provision of basic foodstuffs for survival listed by area and broken down to show (a) Government-held (b) non-Government-held areas, and indicating if the delivery of such aid should be (i) via Khartoum, (ii) via east Africa or (iii) otherwise. [4659]

Dr. Liam Fox: In northern Sudan, serious food shortages have been reported this year in Darfur and Kordofan. The UK has provided £1.5 million to the Save the Children Fund and CARE UK for food aid, purchased within Sudan, to address needs in those areas. There are also reports of food shortages in Red Sea state. In southern Sudan, the World Food Programme predicts serious deficits over the next few months in Juba, Gogrial and parts of Jonglei state including Pochalla and Pibor.

The World Food Programme report that food for outstanding deficit areas in Government and non-Government held areas may be available for purchase within Sudan. They have not yet established the requirement for external provision of food aid. Precise delivery arrangements will depend on the source of food aid and the relative costs of delivery options.

DEFENCE

Surplus Ammunition

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what programme his Department has established to incinerate surplus ammunition; what sites are used; what environmental impact assessments have been conducted at each site; and what is the annual cost of the programme. [3926]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the chief executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 18 November 1996:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the Ministry of Defence's programme to incinerate surplus ammunition. I am replying since the Ministry of Defence's programme is currently carried out by the Defence Evaluation & Research Agency (DERA) of which I am Chief Executive.

DERA has developed a programme for disposing of surplus ammunition and explosives by incineration based at its site at Shoeburyness in Essex. This was in response to ratification of the 1989 Oslo Convention, which banned the dumping of surplus ammunition and explosives at sea, and also a result of a general desire to find a more environmentally friendly means of disposing of these materials.

The Shoeburyness facility currently consists of two incinerators which have been developed over the past few years at a cost of about £5m. They employ a state of the art pollution control system which uses dry spun ceramic filtration and dry scrubbing to control gaseous emissions. All of the waste metals and most of the plastics generated by the system are recovered and recycled. Non recyclable solids are disposed of as controlled waste into a licensed land fill site. The plant does not discharge any waste into water. The system has been licensed by the Environment Agency and they undertake regular surveys to monitor its operation. DERA has also introduced its own programme of regular environmental monitoring of the site.

When fully operationally we anticipate that the incinerator system will be able to deal with up to 2000 tonnes of explosives and ammunition a year. Running costs are expected to be of the order of £600,000 a year. The system, which is known as Avocet, represents a considerable technical achievement and DERA is actively marketing it overseas with the aim of obtaining a return for the UK for our investment in this technology.

Military Hospital Closures

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military hospitals which have closed in the last 12 months; and what proportion of their work was carried out for the NHS. [3054]

Mr. Soames: This is a matter for the Defence Secondary Care Agency and I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ron Smith to Mr. Chris Smith, dated 18 November 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence on the closure of service hospitals as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency (DSCA) .

The DSCA was launched on 30 April this year. Since November 1995, the following three hospitals have closed:

The Princess Mary's Hospital, Halton;

The Princess Alexandra's, Royal Air Force Hospital, Wroughton;

The Cambridge Military Hospital, Aldershot.

The decision to close these hospitals arose from a combination of Options for Change and Front Line First recommendations. No Service hospitals have closed since the launch of this Agency.

Although the responsibility for the treatment of civilian patients rests with the Department of Health, NHS patients have been, and continue to be treated at Service hospitals. This enables our medical personnel to undertake the varied mixture of cases which they require for training and professional development for front lines roles. The proportion of NHS patients seen at the closed hospitals varied from year to year and depended on the location of the hospital. However, in general NHS patients accounted for between 50% and 70% of the hospitals' total caseload.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions an overheated or failed cross-drive clutch has caused a fire in the rear fuselage of a Tornado aircraft. [2828]

Mr. Soames: In 16 years of Tornado operations there have been five confirmed cases of overheated or failed cross-drive clutches causing fires in the rear fuselages of RAF Tornado aircraft. These incidents all took place on the ground during routine engine running tests. The procedures for running Tornado engines on the ground have been reviewed and suitably amended.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Tornado GR1 and F3 aircraft will be allowed to fly before modification 1670 has been made in respect of the recirculating cross-over valve. [2829]

Mr. Soames: Yes. When modification 1670 was designed, a safety analysis confirmed that the operation of both F3 and GR1 Tornado at pre-modification 1670 standard was safe.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the difference in cost between performing modification 1670 to Tornado GR1 and F3 aircraft by means of a contractors' working party as set out in his Department's contracts bulletin, volume 11, No. 2; and assuming sufficient manpower was available, undertaking such work with RAF personnel. [2831]

Mr. Soames: RAF manpower is used to embody aircraft modifications whenever appropriate. On this occasion, the circumstances were such that the use of a contractor's working party allowed the RAF to maximise aircraft availability to the front line. The final contract price is still under negotiation.

Aircraft Maintenance

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in the past two years a contractors' working party has been sought to carry out work on RAF aircraft because the RAF had insufficient manpower for the task. [2830]

Mr. Soames: The RAF has long used contractor's working parties as an effective means of undertaking specific tasks. A number of factors, including the complexity and specialised nature of the work, or the geographical location, can influence the final decision on whether to use a CWP.

Tractors

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he made of the advantages of leasing the agricultural tractors required by his Department as set out in future purchase number LV2/DBG/03 in his Department's contracts bulletin, volume 11, No. 4. [2832]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The potential benefits of leasing agricultural tractors are being assessed as part of a wider study of the scope for using private finance to meet the requirement for some 4,000 mechanical handling vehicles.

In the meantime, the continuing requirement for agricultural tractors will be met by purchase of vehicles through an enabling contract. This approach offers the most cost-effective way of meeting the continuing requirement by ensuring that my Department is not committed to procuring specific quantities but purchase on an as needed basis.

Bois de Mai Residence

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the selling price of the official service residence, Bois de Mai; when the residence was sold; when the residence was purchased and for what purchase price. [4069]

Mr. Soames: The sale of Bois de Mai was completed on 15 April 1996. The residence was sold unfurnished at close to the asking price of £1.565 million. The residence was originally purchased furnished in November 1992 at a cost of 120,000,000 Belgian francs, which equated to approximately £2.2 million at the then rate of exchange.

Prisoners of War

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in reviewing the pay deductions for British officer prisoners of war held by Germany and Italy during the period 1939 to 1945; and if he will make a statement. [4103]

Mr. Soames: The case for additional refunds for pay deductions from British officer prisoners of war held by the Italians and Germans during world war two was examined and rejected in the early 1980s. Submission of new evidence, however, led to a decision earlier this year to review the position. This work, which includes the related question of pay deduction from protected personnel, will be completed as soon as possible.

Beef

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the country of origin of the beef served to British service personnel in Cyprus and Belize in the last year. [4472]

Mr. Arbuthnot: Beef for British service personnel serving in Cyprus and Belize is procured by local contract to achieve best value for money. Supplies to Cyprus are of southern Irish, French and New Zealand origin, while supplies to Belize are of American origin.

Menwith Hill Station

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for right hon. and hon. Members to be given access to Menwith Hill station in North Yorkshire. [4581]

Mr. Soames: No. Access to RAF Menwith Hill by right hon. and hon. Members to receive briefings on the station facilities are generally not permitted on the grounds of disruption to the operational activities of the station and for security reasons.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians have been invited during the past year to visit Menwith Hill station in North Yorkshire. [4582]

Mr. Soames: Approximately 3,800 civilians have visited RAF Menwith Hill within the last year in connection with social and educational events or for local planning reasons. This includes visits by local authority representatives, sports teams, charities, local schools and clubs and those who attended the 4 July open day. Such visits are generally confined to weekends and evenings to ensure they do not impact on the operational activity of the station and access is limited purely to the domestic, recreational and other unrestricted areas of the base.

Major General Prabowo

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet Major General Prabowo during his forthcoming visit to Britain. [4701]

Mr. Soames: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence did not meet General Prabowo during his recent visit to the UK.

Indonesian Special Forces

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what assistance he proposes to give to the Indonesian special forces to enable them to study at the royal college of defence studies; [4700]

(2) what assistance he proposes to give to the Indonesian special forces to enable them to study at the royal college of defence studies. [4698]

Mr. Soames: In accordance with our long-standing practice, details of military assistance are confidential between Governments.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Comité Européen de Normalisation Electrotechnique

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the names of the members of the Comité Européen de Normalisation Electrotechnique. [4395]

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Comité Européen de Normalisation Electotechnique consists of the national standards organisations of the 17 countries of the European economic area and Switzerland. The United Kingdom member is the British electrotechnical committee, which forms an integral part of the British Standards Institution—an independent body incorporated under royal charter.

British Citizens

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the legal protection covering British citizens working abroad; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of introducing protection in British law. [3775]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government have not undertaken an assessment but are aware that different protections apply in other member states of the European Union and other countries. The Government are satisfied with the protections given to employees in this country.

Space Research

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the level of support allocated to space research in each of the last 10 years at current prices. [4060]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 14 November 1996]: The table gives the total UK civil space expenditure, which is co-ordinated by the British National Space Centre, in each of the last 10 years. The figures given are at 1995–96 prices.

Financial year	Total £ million
1986–87	179.08
1987–88	178.82
1988–89	188.21
1989–90	183.63
1990–91	180.75
1991–92	176.58
1992–93	182.32
1993–94	178.59
1994–95	199.05
1995–96	194.89

Aerial Surveys

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what public funding is provided to Cambridge university in respect of aerial survey activities subsequently offered for sale to the private sector. [4163]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 15 November 1996]: I understand that the university's activity in this area is self-supporting and does not involve public funds.

Mr. Morley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the procedure for the tendering process by the Natural Environment Research Council for aerial surveys; and when it next intends to tender. [4162]

Mr. Taylor [holding answer 15 November 1996]: The NERC airborne remote sensing facility bids on a responsive basis for work requiring the application of its unique set of airborne remote sensing systems. Typically there are approximately 10 such inquiries each year.

The management of the Natural Environment Research Council's aircraft, including its maintenance and the provision of pilots and instrument operators, is contracted out on a five-year basis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list the ways in which the Commission has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4537]

Mr. Beith: All works executed by the Parliamentary Works Directorate are carried out with regard to energy efficiency and environmental impact. The design of the phase 2 new parliamentary building includes the Building

Research Establishment environmental assessment method and the building will have an exceptionally low energy usage.

The Accommodation and Works Committee has approved projects to improve the energy efficiency of the Palace of Westminster including new boilers and a cooling plant. The Parliamentary Works Directorate operates an energy efficiency programme in accordance with the Department of the Environment Energy Efficiency Office guidelines and presents annual reports on savings achieved to Committee. Waste, including paper, arising on the parliamentary estate is recycled. Building work is commissioned using the Department of the Environment guidance on environmental considerations, and the standard specifications used for product selection and contract specification include environmental requirements. Building design and maintenance are carried out in accordance with the guidance issued by the central advisory unit of the Office of Public Service.

Parliamentary Bookshop

Mr. Milburn: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will list the companies which owe arrears to the parliamentary bookshop; and if he will make a statement. [4767]

Mr. Beith: The House of Commons Commission does not normally provide commercially confidential information about customers of the parliamentary bookshop. The accounts of all such companies are at present within their credit limits.

SCOTLAND

Woodlands (Projects)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what further support his Department proposes to promote existing projects currently experimenting with the integration of woodland-based manufacturing economies with an increase in the planting of deciduous woodland; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the advantages of supporting existing projects; [3226]

(2) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated with regard to integrating proposals to increase deciduous woodland with the creation of woodland-based manufacturing economies; what financial commitments his Department has made in this area; and if he will make a statement. [3230]

Mr. Kynoch: The area of broadleaved woodland in Britain has increased dramatically since the introduction of our broadleaves policy. We recognise the need to ensure that suitable markets for hardwood are readily available to woodland owners. In our recent rural White Papers for Scotland, England and Wales, we outlined our commitments to promoting sustainable woodland management and developing new markets for hardwood products. The Forestry Commission is involved in a range of initiatives including highland birchwoods, Cumbria broadleaves and Coed Cymru, as well as the "WoodLots" marketing information service, all of which are very successful.

We are supporting a number of research projects on broadleaves forest products, including the grading of British hardwoods for structural purposes, the bonding of lower value wood into laminated veneer lumber and improving the potential of wood for fuel. The Forestry Commission currently spends some £300,000 per annum on research on all types of forest products.

Suicides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of suicides among under-30s, broken down by gender, in Scotland for each year since 1985. [3832]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table.

Deaths from suicide[1], persons aged under 30 by gender, Scotland, 1985–95[2]

	Both Sexes	Males	Females
1985	147	116	31
1986	163	136	27
1987	183	139	44
1988	202	160	42
1989	189	143	46
1990	215	177	38
1991	194	153	41
1992	252	195	57
1993	267	219	48
1994	232	186	46
1995	219	176	43

[1] World Health Organisation International Classification of Diseases (9th Revision) codes E950-E959 and E980-E989 (excl. E988.8).
[2] The table presents information on deaths registered in each year.

Cancer Screening (Compensation Claims)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases involving claims against the Argyll and Clyde health board in relation to the mismanagement of the cervical smear screening programme at the Inverclyde Royal hospital, Greenock, have now been settled; what was the average figure of compensation paid to the women concerned; how many cases are still outstanding; and if he will make a statement. [3716]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 12 cases involving claims against the Argyll and Clyde health board as a result of the mis-reading of cervical smear slides at the Inverclyde Royal hospital, Greenock, have now been settled. Negotiations are continuing to achieve a settlement in the remaining eight cases. Once all the claims have been settled, I will be in a position to give an indication of the total amount of the settlement made.

This is being copied for information to the hon. Member for Renfrew West and Inverclyde (Mr. Graham).

Ambulance Service (Argyll and Clyde)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he had on (a) the installation of a computerised command and control radio system for the Argyll and Clyde health board catchment area and (b) the construction of an ambulance station in Greenock, when he last met the chief executive of the Scottish ambulance service; and if he will make a statement. [3701]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met the Chief Executive of the Scottish Ambulance Service NHS trust on 18 October when he opened the service's new training college at Eddleston. The issues referred to by the hon. Member were not discussed, but I can confirm that a computerised command and control system came into use at Paisley ambulance control on 29 September 1996. Work on rolling out the new ambulance radio system into Argyll and Clyde is under way and the system is scheduled to be operational across the area by April 1998.

A replacement ambulance station for Greenock is the top priority building scheme in the Scottish ambulance service's west region. Funds for this purpose have been reserved in the trust's provisional capital programme for 1997–98. Action is currently being taken to identify an appropriate site for the station.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what area of land was set aside in Scotland in 1995–96 under the arable area scheme. [4227]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Farmers in Scotland set aside 74,258 hectares of land under the 1995 arable area payments scheme.

East Ayrshire Community Hospital

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the costs of the proposals from (a) the Ayrshire and Arran Community Healthcare NHS trust and (b) the preferred private finance initiative bidder, for the East Ayrshire community hospital, what further factors have to be taken into account before a decision is made; when he now expects to be able to announce his decision; and if he will make a statement. [4436]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of the negotiations between the trust and the preferred PFI bidder are covered by commercial confidentiality. The estimated capital value of the project if £8.6 million. A decision on the project will be announced shortly.

NHS Trusts (Finance)

Mr. Chisholm: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the £30 million for capital expenditure in the health service, announced on 9 October, was distributed among trusts; and which trusts have asked for it to be converted into revenue. [4702]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The £30 million of capital expenditure announced on 9 October has been distributed on a formula basis. This is a formula devised by the management executive which takes into account trust turnover, building depreciation and equipment depreciation.

None of these funds will be transferred to revenue.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest estimates of the expenditure on external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1996 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in. [4062]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 November 1996]: The expenditure figures are as follows:

Year	Expenditure £	Expenditure in 1995–96 prices £
1992–93	4,370,327	4,686,979
1993–94	5,383,000	5,635,351
1994–95	4,079,000	4,177,677
1995–96	5,440,364	5,440,364

Not all of the results of consultancy projects lend themselves to measurement in identifiable savings, but major projects over this period can be summarised as:

Work which assists the development of Government policy, especially by considering a range of strategic options. These projects include requirements such as a survey of the public's views and the benefits tend to be qualitative.

Projects related to the development of new information technology systems. This work has helped the Department to meet its responsibilities while achieving significant reductions in staff numbers.

Work which otherwise assists the implementation of Government policy in Scotland, especially where major changes in the way services are provided are involved. Consultancy assistance in support of the "Competing for Quality" initiative contributed to significant savings for the Department.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many complaints he has received regarding the performance of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration; and what plans he has to introduce legislation proposals to improve the complaints process. [3509]

Mr. Freeman: The parliamentary ombudsman is an independent Officer of the House and reports to the Select Committee chaired by my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey). I have occasionally received complaints only about the time taken by the parliamentary ombudsman to complete an investigation: this has not been a significant element of the correspondence handled by my Department, and the number of complaints has not been monitored. I have no plans to introduce legislative proposals on the complaints process.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Criminal Court

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps the British Government are taking to ensure that a date is set for the holding of the plenipotentiary diplomatic conference on the establishment of an international criminal court during 1996; [4654]

(2) what assessment he has made of (a) progress towards and (b) the timetable for the establishment of an international criminal court; and if he will make a statement. [4652]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We are active participants in the process to consider the establishment of an international criminal court. We supported the recommendations of the preparatory committee that up to nine weeks were required for further preparatory work, and that a date for an international conference should be set in 1998. Progress made by the preparatory committee in 1997 will need to be reviewed by next year's general assembly.

Mr. Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has recently received regarding the establishment of an international criminal court. [4653]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have received representations about the establishment of an international criminal court from hon. Members, non-governmental organisations and members of the public.

Major General Prabowo

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet Major General Prabowo during his forthcoming visit to Britain. [4737]

Mr. Hanley: I met General Prabowo on 12 November during his private visit to the UK to thank him on behalf of the British Government for securing the safe release of the four British Hostages in Irian Jaya.

HEALTH

EDS

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3815]

Mr. Horam: Neither the Department of Health, nor its agencies and executive non-departmental public bodies have entered into contracts with Electronic Data Systems since 1985. Information on contracts in the Department's non-executive NDPBs and advisory bodies is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tattooing and Skin Piercing

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 435, what are the current licensing requirements for skin piercing businesses. [3987]

Mr. Horam: The current licensing requirements for skin piercing businesses in London and in the rest of England and Wales are described in section 3 of "Regulation of Skin Piercing: a Consultation Paper" issued jointly by the Department of Health and the Welsh Office on 3 October 1996. Copies are available in the Library.

Adoption (Guatemala)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the delays incurred by UK citizens waiting to adopt children from Guatemala. [4199]

Mr. Burns: I understand that some prospective adopters who made private arrangements to adopt children from Guatemala have been advised by the Guatemalan authorities that these are not acceptable and that only assessments approved by the United Kingdom Government will be accepted on behalf of United Kingdom citizens. This may have led to some delays in individual cases.

Stroke Treatment

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which health authorities have specialist acute stroke units; [3982]

(2) what percentage of those who have had a stroke in each of the last three years for which figures are available were admitted to hospitals; [3980]

(3) what percentage of those admitted to hospital for strokes in each of the last three years for which figures are available (a) died within one month of the original attack and (b) died within six months of the original attack. [3981]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities have specialist stroke rehabilitation units. [3983]

Mr. Horam: Health authorities commission appropriate specialist services for their communities in line with their local needs, resources and priorities. Information on what services each health authority commissions is not collected centrally.

Depression

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to reduce the cost of mental depression to the United Kingdom economy; and what assessment he has made of their effectiveness to date. [3894]

Mr. Burns: Mental illness is one of five key areas in "The Health of the Nation" strategy. The majority of depressive disorders are treated in primary care by general practitioners. We are taking action and promoting initiatives to improve the diagnosis and treatment of the condition in primary care. For example, we are working to develop GP training in the recognition and management of depression and to encourage audit of the management of the condition in primary care; in addition, we collaborated with the Royal College of General

Practitioners and the Royal College of Psychiatrists on the recent "defeat depression" campaign, which aimed to improve detection and prevention of the condition.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 October 1996, Official Report, column 759, if he will commission research into the impact of mental depression on the United Kingdom's economy; and if he will make a statement. [3896]

Mr. Burns: We are already undertaking a range of research into depression. For example, the Department's policy research programme has commissioned a number of studies into severe mental illness, many of which are related to depression. We expect to spend some £500,000 on these studies in 1996–97. In addition, we have made £2.4 million available over the next five years within the policy research programme's mental health research initiative. Many of the commissioned studies within the initiative relate to depression. Work currently being undertaken by the personal social services research unit under the policy research programme is looking at the economic impact of mental disorders, which include depression. The Medical Research Council, the main agency through which the Government support medical and clinical research, has a comprehensive portfolio of research on depressive illness. In particular, it funds a number of trials which examine different types of treatment and therapies for depression. Total funding for this research amounted to almost £0.9 million in 1994–95.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the maximum ambulance response times (a) in an emergency, (b) for discharge from hospital and (c) for an out-patient attendance. [3895]

Mr. Horam: At present all ambulance services in England are expected to respond to 50 per cent. of emergency calls within eight minutes. Urban ambulance services are expected to respond to 95 per cent. of emergency calls within 14 minutes and rural services within 19 minutes.

There are no national standards of discharge or outpatient attendances but local standards may be included in individual contracts for patient transport services.

Special Advisers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many special advisers are employed by his Department; and if he will list their names. [3932]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health employs two special advisers, Mr. Tony Hockley and Mr. Tim Rycroft.

Hip Replacement and Appointment Cost

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current average cost of (a) a hip replacement operation and (b) an out-patient's appointment in the NHS in England. [3934]

Mr. Horam: In 1994–95 the average cost in England of an out-patient attendance was £57.40. The information requested on hip replacement operations is not available centrally.

MRSA

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has given trusts and health authorities to methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus. [3921]

Mr. Horam: The Department issued guidance to the national health service in September 1994 on the control of methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus and in March 1995 on the general control of infections in hospitals. In May 1996, the Department issued new guidance on the control of infection in residential and nursing homes and a leaflet "MRSA: what nursing and residential homes need to know". Copies of this guidance are in the Library.

Children at Risk

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, by local authority, the funds currently allocated by his Department to fund local authority services for children who are at risk. [3978]

Mr. Burns: The total provision made for English local authorities in respect of children's services (including services for children at risk) amounts in the current financial year to £1,754.7 million. This provision, however, is not hypothecated and it is for individual local authorities to determine their own spending priorities in the light of local needs. In addition, grants totalling £9.3 million are also available to local authorities in 1996–97 for services provided by guardians ad litem and for services provided to unaccompanied asylum-seeking children.

European Health Ministers (Meetings)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the dates on which European Health Ministers are to meet in the next six months and the subjects to be discussed. [4696]

Mr. Malone: The Health Council is due to meet in Luxembourg on 2 June 1997 under the forthcoming Dutch presidency of the European Union. The subjects to be discussed will not be agreed until nearer that date. No other formal meetings of European Community Health Ministers are currently planned during the next six months. European Health Ministers may attend the world health assembly in Geneva provisionally scheduled for 5 to 16 May 1997.

Beef and Milk (Bacteria)

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action the Government have taken to inform the public about the health effects of E. coli 0157:117 bacteria in beef and unpasteurised milk; [3712]

(2) what information the Government have issued to health service providers concerning the public health effects of E. coli 0157:117 bacteria in beef and unpasteurised milk. [3714]

Mr. Horam: The Government act to improve food safety through a combination of legislation, codes of practice and advice, including leaflets. This is directed at the professions and the public, especially those in vulnerable groups. We attach great importance to the wide dissemination of information to ensure the importance of safe handling of food is understood by all. This information is relevant to all the organisms which cause food poisoning, including E. coli 0157.

Thorough cooking of food will destroy these organisms and this is stressed in all the advice we give. Members of the vulnerable groups are also advised to avoid uncooked food which carries a high risk of contamination.

The Chief Medical Officer has recommended that beefburgers should be cooked until the juices run clear and there are no pink bits inside. This advice was first given in 1991 and has been repeated since. We have recently revised the leaflet, "While you are pregnant: safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and from contact with animals" which gives advice on safe eating including raw meat and unpasteurised milk. This advice is repeated in the Health Education Authority's pregnancy book. The Ministry of Agriculture Fisheries and Food have issued similar advice through their "Foodsense" leaflets. We have also published general guidance in "Food Handlers Fitness to Work: Guidance for Food Businesses, Enforcement Officers and Health Professionals". Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

Clinical Trials

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring procedures his Department and the Medicines Control Agency follow to ensure that the conduct of phase 1 clinical trials is in compliance with good clinical practice guidelines. [3872]

Mr. Malone: In accordance with advice from the Medicines Commission, phase 1 clinical trials are self-regulated by the professional concerned. The Department and its Medicines Control Agency have no procedures to monitor the conduct of these trials.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibility the Licensing Authority has for the conduct of phase 1 clinical trials in healthy volunteers. [3877]

Mr. Horam: Studies on healthy volunteers are not clinical trials within the definition of the Medicines Act 1968 and therefore are not subject to regulation by the licensing authority.

In the United Kingdom, studies on healthy volunteers are self-regulated by the medical profession and pharmaceutical industry. The Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry established a committee in 1969 to investigate and advise on medical experiments involving pharmaceutical company staff volunteers and published a set of guidelines in 1970 which were updated in 1984 and 1990. The Royal College of Physicians published a report, "Research on Healthy Volunteers", October 1986 which made a number of recommendations to those involved in conducting healthy volunteer studies.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what procedures (a) his Department, (b) the Licensing Authority and (c) the Medicines Control Agency follow to ensure safety of volunteers in phase 1 clinical trials; [3878]

(2) what procedures (a) his Department and (b) the Medicines Control Agency follow to ensure appropriate monitoring of ethics committees considering and approving phase 1 clinical trials. [3879]

Mr. Horam: Most phase 1 clinical trials are carried out for pharmaceutical companies. Under Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry guidelines they must first have obtained the approval of an independent research ethics committee. These guidelines require independent research ethics committees to prepare an annual report in accordance with recommendations from the Royal College of Physicians. Where, less commonly, it is proposed to undertake these trials in the national health service, the approval of a local research ethics committee must be obtained. The Department of Health issued guidance to the NHS on the operation of LRECs in 1991, HSG(91)5, copies of which were placed in the Library.

Vaccinations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made in his Department's review of the vaccinations available on the NHS. [3873]

Mr. Horam: As with all policies, we review the arrangement for vaccines on an on-going basis. In particular we are considering the inconsistencies and ambiguities that have arisen in the arrangements for travel vaccines over the years as new vaccines have been developed and new recommendations for vaccine use have been implemented. The review of the current arrangements is an on-going one and any changes in policy will be communicated to those with an interest.

Hepatitis B

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals in the United Kingdom undertake mandatory ante-natal screening for hepatitis B. [3874]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 22 July 1996, Official Report, column 118.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of hepatitis B carriers in the United Kingdom. [3875]

Mr. Horam: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Mahon) on 12 July 1996, Official Report, column 559.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of hepatitis B carrier is accounted for by "at risk" groups. [3876]

Mr. Horam: There are no national data collected on the number of chronic carriers of hepatitis B that fall into "high risk" groups. The Public Health Laboratory Service communicable disease surveillance centre receives reports of acute hepatitis B infection through the voluntary confidential reporting by laboratories of confirmed cases. Information on risk exposure is available with approximately two thirds of these reports. For details, by former regional health authority for the three years

1993–95, I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 22 July 1996, Official Report, columns 120–21.

Pensioners' Health Care Costs

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost per annum to public funds of the health care costs of (a) the average retirement pensioner and (b) a retirement pensioner in the last two years of their life; and what proportion (c) constitutes of an individual's life-time health care costs. [4381]

Mr. Burns: Figures showing the annual cost of the health care of retirement pensioners are not collected. However, hospital and community health services expenditure for people aged 65 and over was estimated at £1,195 per person in 1994–95.

Statistics on the cost to public funds of health care in the last two years of a retired person's life are not available.

Statistical Information

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish the 1995 public health common data set (a) on disk and (b) in print. [4766]

Mr. Horam: The 1995 public health common data set containing data for 1994 was released last year on disk. The printed version was published in April 1996. Both versions have been placed in the Library.

The 1996 public health common data set containing data for 1995 was sent to health authorities on 15 November 1996. The printed version will be published three months later. A set of the disks is being placed in the Library.

Health Service White Paper

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions he proposes to take in respect of his White Paper on the health service published on 13 November, in respect of (a) legislation, (b) adjustment of methods on formulae relating to distribution of resources between health authorities and (c) recruitment and training of more doctors and nurses. [4550]

Mr. Malone: "A Service with Ambitions", the White Paper on the national health service published on 13 November, reaffirms the Government's commitment to the NHS on the basis of its founding principles. It launches three nationally-led development programmes on information, professional development and managing for quality in the NHS. These programmes will aim to refine and improve existing policies, ensuring they are part of a coherent strategy, and to identify ways of overcoming practical obstacles to progress.

In addition to the publication of the White Paper, the Government will be introducing a Bill to take forward the proposals in "Choice and Opportunity" this Session, keeping the formulae used to inform the allocation of resources to health authorities under continual review, supporting medical work force planning, and supporting the commissioning of non-medical education and training through consortia and regional education and development groups. Nurse training commissions are expected to rise 14 per cent. in 1996–97.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Cleaning

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the total budget for cleaning motorways; and on what basis funds are allocated to the appropriate authorities; [4097]

(2) what targets his Department has set the Highways Agency in respect of cleaning motorways. [4096]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 18 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent questions asking what is the total budget for cleaning motorways; on what basis funds are allocated to the appropriate authorities; and what targets the Highways Agency has been set in respect of cleaning motorways. I shall answer these in reverse order.

The Agency has been set the target of cleaning litter from motorways to the standards set out in the Environmental Protection Act 1990 (the EPA). This legislation is based on the concept of four grades of cleanliness: A (no litter) to D (heavily littered). If the standard falls to grade C (widespread distribution of litter), the Agency is required to restore to grade A (for paved areas) or grade B (for grassed verges) within four weeks. If the standard falls to grade D, the Agency is required to restore the area to grade A or B, as appropriate, within one week.

The Highways Agency delegates the management of motorway cleaning to its Maintaining Agents, most of whom are local highway authorities. They are required to work to the Agency's Code of Practice for Routine Maintenance. This advises that the standards set out in the EPA can best be achieved by a programme of routine litter scavenges. In previous years fund have been allocated to Maintaining Agents to enable them to take this proactive approach and to achieve high standards of cleanliness.

M6 (Lighting)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the motorway lighting on the M6 will be extended from its junction with the M1 to junction 3 of the M6. [4098]

Mr. Watts: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. James Pawsey, dated 18 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about M6 motorway lighting between the M1/M6 Interchange and Junction 3.

In my letter to you of 20 December 1995, I advised that we had no plans to light the M6 between these junctions.

We have again reviewed the overnight safety record for this section of motorway over the last three years and the position remains the same. We cannot justify extending the existing lighting provision to this area.

However, as I said in my last reply, all sections of the motorway and trunk road network are the subject of periodic review and factors could emerge at some stage in the future which may be significant and be such to justify the Agency taking a fresh look at the lighting need.

Traffic Delays

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reports he receives on a daily basis of expected and of unexpected traffic delays on national roads. [4358]

Mr. Watts: Monitoring the flow of traffic on the trunk network is an operational matter which is the responsibility of the Highways Agency. The Highways Agency provides the Secretary of State with reports of severe weather conditions and their impact on the trunk road network, and of major road accidents involving several fatalities, hazardous substances or serious structural damage.

Additionally, the Secretary of State's private office staff have access to several sources of publicly available continuous traffic information.

Road Maintenance

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent on capital maintenance on national roads in each of the past 10 years; and how much other money was available each year for national roads. [4359]

Mr. Watts: The following table shows actual expenditure on the capital maintenance of roads from 1986–87 to 1995–96. Also shown is the figure for other money budgeted for capital and current programme expenditure on national roads.

£ million

Year	Capital Maintenance Roads	Other money budgeted for national roads
1986–87	180.6	755.5
1987–88	213.3	757.3
1988–89	129.4	944.6
1989–90	240.4	1,235.0
1990–91	288.7	1,639.2
1991–92	306.6	1,720.6
1992–93	364.5	1,751.0
1993–94	404.3	1,844.4
1994–95	402.2	1,820.7
1995–96	309.7	1,627.3

Merchant Shipping (Deregulation)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to issue deregulation orders relating to the rates of pay for crew members aboard merchant ships. [4115]

Mr. Bowis: There are currently no plans to issue any deregulation orders in respect of seamen's rates of pay.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to issue deregulation orders relating to crew accommodation aboard merchant ships. [4114]

Mr. Bowis: Current Merchant Shipping (Crew Accommodation) Regulations have been considered in the context of the regulatory review of merchant shipping legislation. The aim has been to remove material which is over-specified and unnecessarily detailed, so far as is consistent with safety and with international treaty obligations which, in this case, are International Labour Organisation conventions 92 and 133. The Marine Safety Agency has recently undertaken formal consultation with the shipping industry on the draft Merchant Shipping (Crew Accommodation) Regulations 1996. These are not intended to reduce the present standards of accommodation or to remove provisions which go beyond the requirements of ILO conventions but to make the regulations more flexible and to make it possible for new solutions to be sought to current problems whilst maintaining existing standards of accommodation.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to issue deregulation orders relating to the plimsoll line. [4113]

Mr. Bowis: Current Merchant Shipping (Load Line) Regulations have been considered in the context of the regulatory review of merchant shipping legislation. The aim has been to remove material which is over-specified and unnecessarily detailed, so far as is consistent with safety. The Marine Safety Agency has recently completed formal consultation with the shipping industry on the draft Merchant Shipping (Load Line) Regulations 1996.

Nuclear Material (Sea Transport)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the transcript of the special consultative meeting held by the International Maritime Organisation in March on the environmental and safety aspects of the transport of irradiated nuclear fuel and other nuclear materials by sea. [2705]

Mr. Bowis: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the most recent draft of the proceedings of the special consultative meeting. A finalised version will be placed in the Library when it has been adopted by the International Maritime Organisation.

Rail Routeing Guide

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will use his powers under the Railway Act 1993 before the end of 1996 to give guidance to the Rail Regulator that the routeing guide must not restrict reasonable routes to any greater extent than was the case before the guide came into effect. [4549]

Mr. Watts: The routeing guide has been issued on a trial basis until May 1997, to give an opportunity for errors and omissions to be corrected. The Rail Regulator and the Franchising Director have already given assurances that they will not approve a guide which unduly restricts the routeing flexibility that passengers enjoy.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Project Work

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list (a) the offices and (b) the budget allocated for the Stoke on Trent project work pilot scheme; and what are the arrangements for the local administration of the scheme. [4366]

Mr. Forth: (a) There are nine Employment Service jobcentres in the Stoke on Trent travel-to-work area. These are Stoke on Trent, Burslem, Cheadle, Hanley, Kidsgrove, Longton, Newcastle under Lyme, Leek and Uttoxeter. (b) £100 million has been allocated to operate the pilots, for up to 100,000 people across the country. The pilots will be administered by the Employment Service, through local jobcentres. The Employment Service will ensure that sufficient funds are made available in each travel-to-work area to cover the numbers entering the target group for the pilots, and the help which they accept.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of those claimants referred to adjudication for refusal or failure to attend project work have (a) received a benefit sanction and (b) been adjudged to have good cause, broken down by the categories of good cause listed in the adjudication officers' guide. [4429]

Mr. Forth: In general, people whose actions fall under the categories of good cause listed in the adjudication officers' guide and in regulation 73 of the Jobseekers Allowance Regulations 1996 will be identified by a project work adviser in the local jobcentre, and not referred to an independent adjudication officer. In judging cases referred to them, sector adjudication officers are not restricted to the list referred to above, but can use their discretion to assess each case on an individual basis. To date, in every case where a sector adjudication officer has made a decision on a case referred for refusal to attend project work, a benefit sanction has been imposed. In 64 per cent. of cases where a decision has been made following referral on the grounds of failure to attend project work a benefit sanction has been imposed. The remainder of cases have been adjudged to have had a good cause.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the comparative areas used for evaluation of the existing project work pilot schemes and the monthly returns from April 1996 in respect of claimants leaving the register in pilot and comparative areas broken down by duration of unemployment. [4430]

Mr. Forth: The comparison offices are Fakenham, Barton on Humber, Chapeltown, Great Yarmouth, Hillsborough, Newport, Cardigan, Portsmouth, Portsmouth North, Cosham, Newhaven, and Stretford.

On the latest available verified figures, 1,418 people left the pilot and stopped claiming benefit in the pilot areas, by the end of September, while 413 people had left benefit in the control offices. All these people have been unemployed for over two years. Over 400 of those who have left the register in the pilot areas had been out of work for more than four years, compared with 94 in the control areas. Ninety-eight of those leaving in pilot areas had not worked for over six years, compared with only nine people in the control areas.

These figures apply to all those who had entered the pilot by the end of September, including many who had only just entered.

A breakdown of these figures by month produces numbers too small to allow reliable conclusions to be drawn. A report based on the monitoring information will be made available in the new year, when there is sufficient data available to allow a more in-depth analysis.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many of the job outcomes achieved by project work participants since inception of the scheme were (a) full-time permanent employment, (b) part-time employment, (c) self-employment and (d) temporary employment. [4431]

Mr. Forth: Early results show that 20 per cent. of those who enter the pilot find a job before they complete the process. Further information is not yet available. A detailed statistical survey is being carried out on a sample of leavers from project work and this will provide information on these, and other, issues. The results of this survey will be available at the end of 1997.

Young People's Services

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidance has been issued for use by (a) the voluntary sector and (b) Church groups who operate services for young people. [4289]

Mr. Paice: The Department issues guidance to national voluntary youth organisations, including Church bodies, on its scheme of grants to those organisations. This includes advice on how to bid for funding and on good practice in voluntary youth work.

Independent Schools

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to introduce measures to require elected parent representatives on governing bodies of independent schools; and if she will make a statement. [4365]

Mrs. Gillan: We have no plans to legislate to interfere in this way in the constitution of independent schools' governing bodies.

Teacher Education

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans she has to prescribe (a) the content and (b) teaching methods for teacher education. [4439]

Mr. Forth: On 18 September, my right hon. Friend announced the introduction of a national curriculum for initial teacher training, starting with primary English and mathematics. It will specify what teachers need to be taught about their subject; what pupils should be taught; effective teaching and assessment methods, and how and when to use them; and the standards of pupil achievement they should expect.

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate she has made of the cost of re-inspection of the 20 initial teacher education departments in higher education institutions; in what ways the criteria for the re-inspection are different for the criteria for the first inspection; for how many and which HEI teacher education departments the initial inspections have not been completed; and what criteria were used in choosing the 20 initial teacher education departments for re-inspection. [4438]

Mr. Forth: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Adjudication Officers

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the staff grade of local adjudication officers based in jobcentres; and what duties other than adjudication they are expected to undertake. [4432]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Grover to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 18 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to reply to your question about Labour Market Adjudication Officers.

The Labour Market Adjudication Officer (LMAO) role exists purely to decide questions arising on claims for Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA). Only a small number of labour market adjudication questions will be decided in Jobcentres, and decisions on these questions will only be given by selected ES people who have been trained as LMAOs. The selection of people to perform this task is at the discretion of business managers and, when making their selection, the specific features of LMAO work will be a key consideration.

We do not expect there to be a need for the LMAO role to be carried out on a full-time basis, although this may change over time. The function will normally be performed by an adviser or a back to work team leader, in addition to their usual duties.

The grading of each individual post depends, therefore, on its content and it would not be right to assume that everyone carrying out the LMAO function should be allocated to the same pay band. In some situations, it may be that the additional LMAO responsibilities are sufficient to take the particular post into the next higher pay band. LMAO duties are, therefore, carried out by people in Management Pay Bands 5, 6 or 7, depending on the precise combination of duties.

It will take time for JSA and the role of the LMAO to settle down. Once a position of stability has been reached, we would expect a re-evaluation of individual posts to be carried out as appropriate.

I hope this is helpful.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will place in the Library copies of (a) the central adjudication services guidance on jobseeker's allowance used by sector adjudication officers, (b) the Employment Service guidance on jobseeker's allowance used by local adjudication officers in jobcentres and (c) the volumes entitled "Local Office Adjudication and Adjudication Procedural Guidance" [4433]

Mr. Forth: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Craven to Mr. Terry Rooney, dated 18 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Education and Employment has asked me, in the absence of the Chief Executive, to write to you concerning the placement in the Library of copies of the Central Adjudication Services guidance on Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) used by sector adjudication officers, Employment Service guidance on JSA used by local adjudication officers in Jobcentres and the volumes entitled, Local Office Adjudication and Adjudication Procedural Guidance.

My understanding is that the Central Adjudication Service have placed guidance on Jobseeker's Allowance used by their sector adjudication officers in the Library.

The guidance manuals you requested on Adjudication Procedural Guidance, Labour Market Adjudication Officer Procedural Guidance and Local Office Adjudication have not been made available. This is in accordance with Part 7 para (a) and (b) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

I hope this is helpful.

Pre-school Education

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment for what reasons (a) private nurseries, (b) playgroups and (c) local education authority schools for under-fives are not subject to uniform (i) regulations and (ii) standards imposed by a single body. [4551]

Mr. Robin Squire: The regulation of different institutions is designed to correspond to the type of service they provide. Maintained schools provide education and are bound by education legislation. Private nurseries and playgroups offer day care as well as education for very young children and are therefore required to register under the Children Act 1989.

Surplus Places

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for each local education authority in England the number of surplus places and the money allocated to removing them using the latest available data. [4728]

Mr. Robin Squire: For the number of surplus places in each local education authority, I refer the hon. Member to the reply the Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend for Chesham and Amersham (Mrs. Gillan), gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) on Tuesday 19 March 1996, Official Report, columns 113–18.

One of our priorities for capital allocations is supporting cost-effective surplus place removal projects. The following table shows the amount allocated in 1995–96 and 1996–97, in response to local education authority bids, for the first year costs of new surplus place removal projects.

Full-time Education

Mr, Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of 16 and 17-year-olds in England are in full-time education. [5031]

Mr. Paice: There were 70.7 per cent. of 16-year-olds and 59.3 per cent. of 17-year-olds in full-time education in England in 1995–96—provisional figures.

Nursery Inspections

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) how many nursery settings have been (a) passed and (b) failed by the inspectors; [4929]

(2) if she will place in the Library a list of the establishments registering to redeem nursery vouchers, which have been inspected thus far; [4930]

(3) how many of the establishments registering to redeem nursery vouchers, due to be inspected by March 1996, have so far been inspected; [4931]

(4) what are the criteria used to assess the quality of the inspection work of the nursery inspectors; and how the work will be monitored; [4932]

(5) how many applications have been received for the post of nursery inspector and how many applications have been approved as nursery inspectors; [4933]

(6) if she will list the inspection contractors which have been appointed by the contracting administrator for the nursery voucher scheme. [4934]

Mr. Robin Squire: These are matters for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

13. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is her policy on tourism; and if she will make a statement. [2846]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There are six main elements to my Department's tourism policy: championing and raising the profile of tourism; increasing competitiveness; improving the quality of the tourism product; developing a world-class human resource; making marketing more effective; and managing the impact of tourism. My Department and the tourist boards are now working with an industry forum to develop by early next year a new strategy based on these elements.

Midweek Lottery Draw

14. Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received in respect of the proposed introduction of the midweek lottery; and if she will make a statement. [2847]

27. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many representations she has received on the subject of an additional weekly national lottery draw; and if she will make a statement. [2862]

Mr. Sproat: My Department has received 16 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and 130 from members of the public on the subject of a mid-week Lottery. The licensing of a midweek draw was a matter for the Director General of the National Lottery, subject to the provisions set out in section 4 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993.

Millennium Funds (Plymouth)

15. Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations she has received regarding bids for millennium funds in respect of Plymouth. [2848]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Millennium Commission, of which I am chairman, has received representations regarding Plymouth 2000 Partnership's bid "Plymouth Waterfront—A Celebration of Discovery", which is still under consideration, from the port of Plymouth, the West Country tourist board, Plymouth Marketing Bureau, and five individuals. One individual was opposed to the project.

The Commission is always pleased to hear of support or otherwise for a project, and this is one of the key criteria used in assessing applications for funding.

Sport

16. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on her Department's funding for sport. [2849]

Mr. Sproat: The Department's funding provision for sport in 1996–97 is £52 million. In addition, the National lottery sports fund has provided funding for sport in England of £305 million to date and £368 million for the UK as a whole.

17. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to encourage young people to participate in sporting activities. [2850]

Mr. Sproat: The Government's policy statement, "Sport: Raising the Game", published in July 1995, sets out our plans for putting sport back at the heart of school life, promoting links between schools and clubs and establishing a new British academy of sport as the pinnacle of a regional network of centres of sporting excellence and academies for particular sports. In July this year, we published "Sport: Raising the Game—the First Year Report", which reports progress on all these initiatives. Work is continuing on the various initiatives and a further announcement of progress will be made in the new year.

Dance and Drama Students

18. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representation she has received since her recent statement on the training of dance and drama students. [2851]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I was delighted that on 14 October I was able to announce plans to help more students to take up places at accredited dance and drama training schools in England. My Department has since received a number of letters, mainly from members of the public, on this subject. The Arts Council of England is in the process of formulating the operational details of the new scheme, in close consultation with local authority associations. The House will, I hope, join me in congratulating the Arts Council on having identified an ingenious interim solution to this problem.

South Bank Ferris Wheel

19. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the advantages of providing millennium fund assistance for the ferris wheel proposed for the south bank. [2852]

Mrs. Bottomley: Neither the Millennium Commission nor the Government has received any requests for funding for the proposal to build a ferris wheel on the south bank. I understand that the proposed scheme is to be funded entirely by the private sector.

Arts Sponsorship

20. Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to promote business sponsorship of the arts. [2853]

Mr. Sproat: My Department actively encourages private sector support for the arts. The National Heritage arts sponsorship scheme—the pairing scheme—has brought in more than £110 million in new money to the arts since it started in 1984. We also give financial support to Business in the Arts' "board bank" scheme, launched earlier this year by my right hon. Friend, which encourages senior managers to offer their skills to arts organisations on a voluntary basis. The Department's policy document, "Setting the Scene", highlighted the importance of business sponsorship as part of a plural funding system for the arts.

Volunteering

21. Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what action her Department is taking to promote volunteering. [2854]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department supports, promotes and encourages volunteering in a wide variety of ways. Under the "make a difference" initiative £20 million is being used in the direct funding of projects, and to extend and strengthen the network of volunteer bureaux. These projects run from the most local—such as anti-bullying projects in schools, run by the pupils themselves—to the national—such as the national volunteering helpline and interactive computer databases of volunteering opportunities. Outstanding volunteering action is recognised through the "make a difference"/Whitbread awards. I have also recently launched a new grant programme to help local, volunteer-run community groups to become more effective. The "make a difference" initiative is making it easier for people to volunteer, and encouraging the development of many more volunteering opportunities.

Volunteering is a theme which runs through much of my Department's work. Both museums and the sporting world, for instance, are dependent on the efforts of an army of willing volunteers, and I am determined to support this in every way possible. I was particularly pleased at the recent publication by the Sports Council of its survey report, "Valuing Volunteers in Sport". My Department is also working with the national lottery distribution bodies to ensure that they recognise the role of volunteers in their grant-giving. Finally, through the ministerial group on volunteering and the voluntary sector, I co-ordinate the policy and practice on volunteering of the Government as a whole—for instance, Departments are currently updating their "make a difference" action plans, originally published in October last year.

Cornish Cultural Life

22. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what new proposals she has to encourage studies into Cornish cultural life. [2856]

Mr. Sproat: At present my right hon. Friend has no proposals for studies relating to Cornish cultural life. Nor do the Arts Council of England or the South West Regional Arts Board.

Academy of Sport

23. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to make an announcement on the location for the national British academy of sport; and if she will make a statement on the procedure for deciding on the location of regional sports centres. [2857]

Mr. Sproat: Twenty-six bids have now been received for the British academy of sport, and we hope to make an announcement on the location early in the new year. Details of the Government's proposals for the regional institutes will be included in the prospectus which we aim to launch in early spring next year.

National Lottery

24. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment she has made of the effects of the national lottery on bodies funding sports and the arts. [2858]

Mr. Sproat: To date, the national lottery distributing bodies responsible for making grants to sport and the arts have made 3,950 awards for a total of £1,014.3 million. The injection of such large sums into these sectors in such a short space of time is nothing short of a revolution.

25. Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the latest assessment she has made of the revenue implications of capital grants made under the national lottery scheme for the arts, charities and sport. [2859]

Mrs. Bottomley: The lottery distributing bodies must consider the viability and revenue implications of any capital projects which they support. They may provide revenue funding through endowments or in the form of revenue grants, where this is necessary to complete a capital project.

Digital Terrestrial Television

26. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the progress of digital terrestrial television. [2861]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The UK remains on target for the early introduction of the first digital terrestrial television services in the world. I am very grateful for the prodigious efforts of the ITC in achieving this progress in implementing the Broadcasting Act 1996. All the terrestrial broadcasters who were offered guaranteed capacity on digital multiplexes by the Government have indicated to the Independent Television Commission that they intend to take up that capacity. On 31 October, the ITC invited applications to operate the four digital multiplexes not pre-assigned. Those applications must be submitted by 31 January 1997. The commission hopes to award the licences shortly thereafter, and intends that all licensees should begin their services by 1 July 1998 at the latest.

Independent Radio Operators

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what responsibility she has for the allocation of public airwaves to independent radio operators. [3900]

Mr. Sproat: Under the terms of the Broadcasting Acts 1990 and 1996, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State assigns a range of frequencies to the Radio Authority for the provision of independent radio services. Responsibility for planning the use of this spectrum to deliver a range of national and local services is a matter for the Radio Authority under the terms of the Broadcasting Acts.

Football Grounds

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many nationwide league football clubs' grounds need major work to bring them up to the standards of the Taylor report in (a) nationwide league division one, (b) nationwide league division two and (c) nationwide league division three. [3766]

Mr. Sproat: The Football Trust estimates that there are 37 clubs in the Nationwide League whose grounds require improvements to meet Government requirements on all-seating or safe terracing. Of these clubs, seven are in division 1, 14 are in division 2, and 16 are in division 3.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what assessment she has made of the improvements needed to football grounds in the nationwide league to enable them to reach Taylor report standards in respect of (a) terracing and seating, (b) barriers, (c) lighting and (d) other safety issues; and what estimates she has made of the cost in respect of each of these categories; [3807]

(2) what estimate she has made of the costs for nationwide league football clubs who need to carry out major work to bring their grounds up to the standards of the Taylor report, in (a) nationwide league division one, (b) nationwide league division two and (c) nationwide league division three. [3703]

Mr. Sproat: Most clubs in Nationwide League division 1 meet the Government's requirements on all-seating. Those few that do not have either been granted an extension to the deadline, on account of their having been recently promoted, or are relocating to new stadia. Clubs in divisions 2 and 3 are not required to go all-seated, but those that choose not to do so will have to meet certain minimum standards for standing terraces by August 1999. A survey is currently being carried out by the Football Licensing Authority to ascertain precisely what will be necessary at each ground to satisfy this minimum requirement.

Medical Scanners

Sir Julian Critchley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many scanners have been purchased from the proceeds of national lottery money. [4269]

Mr. Sproat: No medical scanners have been purchased with national lottery funds.

Regional Sports Centres of Excellence

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans she has to establish regional sporting centres of excellence; and if she will make a statement. [3216]

Mr. Sproat: Details of the Government's proposals for regional centres of sporting excellence will be early next year.

Film Industry

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions she has had with representatives of the film industry. [2855]

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with representatives of the film industry on a wide range of film-related issues. Specifically, this summer she visited the United States of America, where she met leading figures from the American film industry including representatives from MCA, Warner Brothers and the Motion Picture Association of America.

More recently, my right hon. Friend attended the Edinburgh film festival, visited Shepperton studios and the Warner Brothers feature animation studio in central London, visited the set of the feature film "Wilde", at the invitation of the producers, and attended the opening of the London film festival as a guest of the British Film Institute.

Sports Sponsorship

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the financial level of sponsorship for sport in each of the last five years at 1996 prices; and what assessment she has made of the effect of the national lottery on sponsorship levels. [2922]

Mr. Sproat: The estimated size of the UK sports sponsorship market for the last five completed years, at 1996 prices, is shown in the table. No assessment has been made of the effect of the national lottery on sponsorship levels. Some £58 million of private sector funding has been attracted to support lottery projects.

Estimated size of the UK sports sponsorship market

£ million

Year	Amount	At 1996–97 prices
1991	238	272
1992	239	262
1993	250	266
1994	265	278
1995	285	291

Football Trust

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the finances of the Football Trust. [2835]

Mr. Sproat: Since 1990 the Government have made £138 million available to the Football Trust to grant aid clubs' ground development projects, through a reduction in pool betting duty that the pools companies pass on to the trust. The trust's income from this source has fallen since the introduction of the national lottery. From last May, the trust has benefitted from a further ½ per cent. reduction in pool betting duty worth up to £3 million per year.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

33. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he last met the Law Society to discuss legal aid. [2869]

Mr. Streeter: I refer the hon. gentleman to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien).

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much legal aid was granted to (a) foreign nationals and (b) the indigenous population in each of the last three years; to how many individuals; and if he will make a statement. [3217]

Mr. Streeter: Information as to an applicant's nationality is not collected and is therefore not available. The Legal Aid Board does maintain a record of applications received from applicants resident outside the United Kingdom, but information on the cost to legal aid of those cases could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the total sum which may be made available to solicitors through the legal aid scheme in advance of the appropriate determination of the size of legal costs to be determined in legal aid cases; and if he will assess the advantages of charging interest payments on these sums in the last available year. [4729]

Mr. Streeter: Lawyers may claim on account 75 per cent. of the costs they estimate they have incurred for each of the first three years of a case. In 1995–96, of 372,611 bills paid, there had been overpayments of payments on account on 15,317 bills. The average overpayment was £552. Any overpayment is recovered, or more likely, set off against other payments due from the Legal Aid Board. Systems are in place to detect abuses and the Legal Aid Board actively pursues solicitors who abuse the scheme. The large majority of payments on account are however properly made for work properly done and there are no plans to introduce further costly systems in order to recover interest in the few cases where this would be appropriate.

Administration of Justice

36. Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to make the administration of justice in civil cases more efficient. [2872]

Mr. Streeter: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to his written question on 31 October, Official Report, column 222.

Public Record Office

37. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many people visited the Public Record Office census rooms in 1995; and if he will make a statement. [2874]

Mr. Streeter: The number of reader visits to the census rooms in 1995 was 76,781.

The census rooms will remain open in the Chancery lane building until March 1997, when they will move to Myddelton place, 88 Roseberry avenue, London EC1. Their holdings will be supplemented with microfilms of other Public Record Office sources popular with family historians, including probate records and non-Anglican registers of births, marriages and deaths.

Myddelton place will also house the indexes of births, marriages and deaths currently made available to the public at St. Catherine's house by the Office for National Statistics. It will thus become a joint major centre for family historians and other researchers, within easy reach of central London repositories for related source materials.

Myddelton place will have improved facilities for users, including a central information point, shop, refreshment facilities, exhibition space, lecture room and better provision for readers with special needs, as well as search rooms.

Witness Intimidation

38. Mr. Robathan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what new proposals he has to counter witness intimidation. [2875]

Mr. Streeter: It is already an offence to intimidate witnesses. The Government are conducting a review into ways in which a defendant might be prevented from questioning rape victims and other vulnerable witnesses. There has recently been considerable work on victim and witness care: the Crown court witness service now operates in all Crown court centres, the new victims charter has been issued, and a national model agreement on witness care, including steps to combat intimidation, has been issued so that local agreements can be reached on the most appropriate steps.

Accident Claims

39. Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will take steps to accelerate hearing dates in the High Court in relation to accident claims. [2876]

Mr. Streeter: The Department is currently taking forward reform of the civil justice system in the light of Lord Woolf's review and one of its aims is to bring cases to a conclusion more expeditiously. Pending implementation of the reforms, litigants or their representatives continue to be at liberty to apply to the court to accelerate the hearing of an accident claim, where appropriate.

Value for Money (Legal Profession)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what discussions he has had with the Bar Council and the Law Society on barristers and solicitors providing value for money. [4296]

Mr. Streeter: The legal profession is independent and self-regulating. Fee levels are, in privately funded matters, for client and lawyer to determine subject to the lawyer's professional rules and any particular controls provided by the courts, for example, taxation of costs. However, the Government are concerned to get value for money from publicly funded legal services. The legal aid rates paid to barristers and solicitors are considered each year in consultation with the Bar Council and the Law Society. The value for money provided by legal aid payments to barristers and solicitors is therefore considered on an annual basis, and is discussed with the profession with the same regularity.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the pany and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3814]

Mr. Streeter: The chief executives of the Court Service, the Land Registry, the Public Record Office and the Public Trust Office will reply on behalf of their agencies. Prior to the establishment of the Court Service and the Public Trust Office as agencies, there is no record of any contracts with EDS. No contracts have been entered into with EDS subsequently by the remainder of the Department or its associated offices.

Letter from M. D. Huebner to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 18 November 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, has asked me to reply to the above Question about the contracts the Court Service has had with Electronic Data Systems Ltd (EDS).

Since the establishment of the Agency in April 1995, the Court Service has awarded two contracts to EDS. The first began in September 1996 and is for the provision of Information Services to county courts and Crown Court Centres in England and Wales and to the Bankruptcy and Companies Courts. EDS will be paid only for the volume of valid process produced (eg summonses in the county courts, petitions in the Bankruptcy Court) so the final cost is dependent on the Court Service's volume of business. However, the cost of providing the currently contracted IT services is expected to be between £20 million and £25 million (plus VAT) over 7 years. No modifications of the contract have yet been made.

The first module of the contract, to introduce a case management system into the county courts by the end of 1997, will save staff time equivalent to 600 full time posts.

Under a second contract EDS provided one day of consultancy support in October 1996 to the Management Structure Review Team in Court Service Headquarters. This consisted of technical advice (not available in-house) on identifying and weighting factors as part of formal decision-making. The work was not connected with the Information Services contract and was separately negotiated at a daily rate of £751. EDS completed the work, without modification and no job reductions arose from this contract.

Letter from Julia C. Lomas to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 18 November 1996:

The Parliamentary Secretary has asked me to reply to you as part of the Lord Chancellor's Department's response to your Parliamentary Question, listed on 8 November 1996, regarding contracts with EDS for each year since 1985.

The Public Trust Office has not awarded any contracts to EDS since 1985.

Letter from Stuart Hill to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 18 November 1996:

I have been asked by the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, to reply to your recent question concerning contracts with EDS.

H M Land Registry has granted no contracts to this company.

Letter from Sarah Tyacke to Mr. Kevin McNamara, dated 18 November 1996:

I have been asked by the Lord Chancellor's Parliamentary Secretary to reply, for the Public Record Office, to your question about contracts with EDS.

The Public Record Office has had no contracts with EDS.

WALES

Tuberculosis

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many registered homeless have died from tuberculosis in Wales in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [1495]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally. Measures taken by the Department to combat tuberculosis were set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 7 November, Official Report, column 685.

Higher Education

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of young people currently enter higher education; and what comparisons he has made with the numbers entering in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) each member of the European Union. [3039]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information is available on a comparable basis for 1993 and is as follows:

Country of domicile	Students entering higher education for the first time as a percentage of population[1]
Wales	31.5
England	28.4
Scotland	35.4
GB	29.7

[1] Home domiciled students aged under 21 entering full-time higher education for the first time anywhere in Great Britain as a percentage of the average of the number of 18 and 19-year-olds in each home country.

Data are available for European Union countries on a slightly different basis for 1992 and are as follows:

Country	Number of new entrants to full-time university education as a percentage of persons of starting age
Belgium	27.3
Denmark	41.5
France	30.6
Germany (FTFR)	35.3
Germany	33.0
Greece	15.9
Ireland	22.1
Italy	41.3
Netherlands	40.1
Spain	43.3
United Kingdom	26.6

Millennium Celebrations

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what events he plans to hold to draw support from the Welsh business community for the millennium celebrations. [3106]

Mr. Hague: In September, I attended a lunch for members of the Welsh business community. I am not aware of any further events at present.

Woodlands Projects

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what further support his Department proposes to promote existing projects currently experimenting with the integration of woodland-based manufacturing economies with an increase in the planting of deciduous woodland; and if he will make a statement on his assessment of the advantages of supporting existing projects; [3227]

(2) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated with regard to integrating proposals to increase deciduous woodland with the creation of woodland-based manufacturing economies; what financial commitment his Department has made in this area; and if he will make a statement. [3231]

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 13 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland.

Smallholdings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assistance his Department gives to encourage smallholdings. [3453]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Welsh Office policies and support for agricultural businesses apply to smallholdings and larger business. In carrying out various programmes to improve the economic performance of the agriculture industry, full account is taken of the needs of small businesses. Small businesses also benefit from implementation of the Government's deregulation policies.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what plans he has to assist children at risk in respect of difficulties after entry to school; [4201]

(2) what initiatives he has taken concerning policies for those with dyslexia at school. [4200]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The measures introduced by the Education Act 1993, now consolidated in part IV of the Education Act 1996, require schools to publish, and report on, policies for children with special educational needs, including those who are dyslexic, and to make appropriate provision. Schools, local education authorities and other agencies also have to have regard to the code of practice on the identification and assessment of special educational needs which contains guidance on the provision to be made for children with specific learning difficulties such as dyslexia.

The Welsh Office makes funding available to local education authorities under the grants for education support and training programme for the training of teachers of children with special educational needs, including dyslexia.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to ensure that the problems and potential of dyslexic people are raised in the teacher training curriculum; and if he will make a statement. [4204]

Mr. Evans: The existing criteria for courses of initial teacher training set out the competences expected of newly qualified teachers with regard to the education of children with special educational needs, including dyslexia. There will be full consultation on the new ITT requirements in the new year.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list by authority and service area, the surplus achieved on trading accounts by local authorities' direct labour or services organisations in Wales for those services covered by the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 for the financial year 1994–95 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices; [4483]

(2) if he will list by authority and service area, the deficits of local authority direct labour or services organisations in Wales that have failed to meet the rate of return requirements for contracts under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 and the Local Government Act 1988 for the financial year 1994–95 in (a) cash and (b) constant prices. [4484]

Mr. Hague: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what area of land was set aside in Wales in 1995–96 under the arable area scheme. [4217]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: A total of 4,479.18 hectares.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many payments were made in Wales in 1995–96 under the arable area payments scheme (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000, (k) £200,001 and £250,000 and (l) £250,001 and over. [4219]

Mr. Evans: The information is as follows:

Payment band	Number of payments
£0–£5,000	2,027
£5,001–£10,000	98
£10,001–£15,000	109
£15,001–£20,000	64
£20,001–£25,000	32
£25,001–£50,000	65
£50,001–£75,000	11
£75,001–£100,000	3
£100,001–£150,000	1

There were no payments above £150,000.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many payments were made in Wales in 1995–96 for set aside under the arable area scheme (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000 and (g) over £50,001. [4218]

Mr. Evans: The information requested is as follows:

Payment band	Number of payments
£0–£5,000	345
£5,001–£10,000	44
£10,001–£15,000	10
£15,001–£20,000	1
£20,001–£25,000	1
£25,001–£50,000	1

There were no payments above £50,000.

Fire Authorities (Finance)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the indicative contributions from the 22 constituent councils to their respective fire authorities. [3991]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is given in the following table:

Local authority contributions to fire authority budgets 1996–97

	£ thousand
Conwy	2,707

Local authority budget returns.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from local authorities in Wales on each of the three fire service budgets; and what has been his response to these representations. [3993]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have responded to two representations from local authorities in Wales. The matter was also raised at the meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 23 September. The funding of fire brigades is the responsibility of their constituent local authorities. Provision for fire spending is included in the 1996–97 local authority revenue settlement which was approved by the House of Commons on 8 February.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take in the event of one of the fire authorities failing to vote a supplementary levy in order to set a budget for the proper delivery of the fire services in Wales; and if he will make a statement. [3990]

Mr. Jones: Under the relevant legislation, this situation cannot arise. Each fire authority is required to set a budget which will enable its brigade to meet its statutory obligations under the Fire Services Act 1947 and to comply with the nationally recommended minimum standards of fire cover. In the case of combined fire authorities there is scope for the budget to be increased where circumstances warrant it.

Paragraph 21(5) of the South Wales Fire Services (Combination Scheme) Order 1995 requires that payments made to the South Wales fire authority by its constituent local authorities

"shall be made at such times, and shall be of such amounts, as are at all times sufficient to enable the financial obligations of the Authority to be met."

Similar provisions are contained in the orders for the Mid and West Wales, and North Wales fire authorities.

Mr. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the standard spending assessment figures for fire services in Wales prior to reorganisation and the figures for the aggregated budgets of the (i) North Wales, (ii) Mid and West Wales and (iii) South Wales fire services. [3992]

Mr. Jones: There were no standard spending assessments for fire brigades in Wales before reorganisation. Fire brigades were covered by the SSAs of the old counties.

The following table gives the 1995–96 fire brigade budgets of the old counties aggregated as closely as possible to the new combined fire authority areas. The only difference between these aggregated areas and the new fire authority areas is a small part of Clwyd which was transferred to Powys on 1 April 1996.

Local authority fire brigade budgets 1995–96

Nursery Vouchers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 210, if he will publish the letter he received in favour of nursery vouchers in Wales. [4768]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend is unable to publish unsolicited letters from members of the public, but the correspondent expressed strong support for the scheme and asked for her views, and those or others like her, to be represented.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Access Funds

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been made available for access funds in higher and further education in each year since they were introduced. [3585]

Mr. Ancram: The resources made available for access funds since their introduction in the academic year 1990–91 are as follows:

£ 000

Financial Year [1]	Allocation
	Higher Education	Further Education
1990–91	348	144
1991–92	365	293
1992–93	369	297
1993–94	403	326
1994–95	443	394
1995–96	457	411
1996–97	458	411

[1] For higher education the financial year is August to July; for further education the Government financial year.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the adequacy of access funds in higher and further education. [3584]

Mr. Ancram: As part of the Government commitment to monitor student finance, a United Kingdom-wide student income and expenditure survey was carried out by the Policy Studies Institute during the 1995–96 academic year. This survey has included students in receipt of access funds. The findings will be published shortly.

"A Ray of Hope"

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the award of the UNESCO youth ambassador for the culture of peace to the choir, "A Ray of Hope"; and what assessment he has made of the contribution of the choir to the development of a more integrated society. [3436]

Mr. Ancram: The "Ray of Hope" choir is worthy of the warmest congratulations on winning the award of youth ambassador for the culture of peace. The children and teachers of the choir are fine examples of how mutual understanding among our young people can produce very positive results. By spreading the word of peace and reconciliation wherever they perform, they are making their own special contribution towards a more integrated society.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the private finance initiative projects in Northern Ireland which (i) are under construction, (ii) have been approved and (iii) are in the process of development. [3587]

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 7 November, Official Report, column 665.

Smallholdings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assistance his Department gives to encourage smallholdings. [3450]

Mr. Ancram: While there are no capital grant schemes specifically targeted to encourage smallholdings, grant assistance for all sizes of farm business is available under the sub-programme for agriculture and rural development—SPARD—capital grant and farm innovation schemes. Both of these are closed for receipt of applications at present.

The Department's agri-food development service runs a number of programmes, which include formal vocational courses and involve training courses and group activities at local community level in disadvantaged areas. These are of benefit to farms of all sizes, including small and very small holdings. Assistance for the establishment of farm woodlands is provided by the woodland grant scheme and the farm woodland premium scheme.

The Department has provided £900,000 of funding from the LEADER II programme to Family Farm Development Ltd. an organisation which aims to assist farm businesses.

Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many extra housing places for students have been created in the past 10 years; and what increase in student numbers there has been in further and higher education over the same years. [3583]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 1,741 extra housing spaces for students were created in the 10-year period 1 August 1986 to 31 July 1996.

In the same period, the number of full-time undergraduate students on higher education courses at Northern Ireland institutions increased from 15,274 to 27,134. The number of students on full-time further education courses increased from 15,178 to 21, 096.

Bovine Products Regulations

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce provisions to extend the Bovine Products (Despatch to other Member States) Regulations 1996 to Northern Ireland. [3667]

Mr. Ancram: It is planned to introduce before the end of 1996 Northern Ireland Bovine Products (Despatch to other Member States) Regulations similar to those introduced in Great Britain.

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3811]

Sir John Wheeler: The Northern Ireland Office, Northern Ireland departments and agencies have had one contract with EDS since 1985, which began in 1995. I am unable to disclose the value of this contract as that is covered by commercial confidentiality. The contract is not yet complete, no modifications have been made at the request of EDS or the Department, no work has been undertaken in-house and no job reductions have taken place. To include information in respect of associated bodies would incur disproportionate cost.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what area of land was set-aside in Northern Ireland in 1995–96 under the arable area scheme. [4224]

Mr. Ancram: The total set-aside under the arable area payments scheme in Northern Ireland in 1995–96 was 1,726 hectares.

Health Services (Newry and Mourne)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was (a) the total number of people in receipt of day care services, (b) the average number of day care service hours available to each recipient, (c) the total number of day care service hours available and (d) the total budget available for day care services for each year since 1990 in the Newry and Mourne district; and what are the projected figures in each case in each year to 2000. [3952]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the number of adults registered at statutory day care facilities within the Newry and Mourne health and social services trust area as at 31 March each year.

Year	Number of adults
1990	467
1991	621
1992	626
1993	599
1994	546
1995	522

Projected information is not held centrally. The average number of day care service hours available to each recipient and the total number of day care service hours available are not collected centrally.

The total budget available for each year, for which figures are available, was as follows:

Year	Total expenditure
1992–93	887,139
1993–94	1,195,286
1994–95	1,212,386

1993: 5,436

1994: 4,958

1995: 6,173

Projected figures are not available centrally.

Note:

The 1990 figure excludes elderly people and physically disabled people who were in contact with the trust.

The 1991 figure excludes elderly people who were in contact with the trust.

The 1994 figure includes estimated data for the number of mentally ill people who were in contact with the trust.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of attendances at psychiatric day hospitals in Newry and Mourne district in each year since 1990; and what are the projected figures for each year to 2000. [3955]

Mr. Moss: There are no psychiatric day hospitals in Newry and Mourne health and social services trust.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of psychiatric out-patient attendances in the Newry and Mourne district in each year since 1990; and what are the projected figures for each year to 2000. [3956]

1992–93: 0

1993–94: 0

1994–95: 4,196

1995–96: 3,819

Note:

During the years 1992–93 and 1993–94, there were no psychiatric out-patient clinics in the Newry and Mourne health and social services trust area. Services in these years were provided elsewhere.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of face-to-face contacts with community psychiatric nurses in the Newry and Mourne district in each year since 1990; and what are the projected figures for each year to 2000. [3959]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the number of face-to-face contacts with community psychiatric nurses in the Newry and Mourne health and social services trust. Information for individual trusts is not available prior to 1994–95.

1994–95: 8,053

1995–96: 9,087

Projected information is not available centrally.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total number of patients treated in the Newry and Mourne district in each year since 1990 broken down by (a) general surgery, (b) ear, nose and throat, (c) general medicine, (d) cardiac medicine, (e) gynaecology, (f) obstetrics, (g) paediatrics, (h) psychiatry, (i) ophthalmology, (j) dermatology, (k) oral surgery, (l) thoracic surgery, (m) haematology and (n) accident and emergency; and what are the projected figures for each year to 2000. Daisy Hill Hospital

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of (a) the clinical effectiveness and (b) the cost-effectiveness of Daisy Hill hospital; and what plans he has to safeguard the future of the hospital. [3951]

Mr. Moss: Assessments of the clinical effectiveness and the cost effectiveness of Daisy Hill hospital are a matter for Newry and Mourne HSS trust and its purchasers in the first instance. The future role of the hospital will be shaped by the requirements of my Department's regional strategy for health and social well-being 1997 to 2000, taking account of local needs.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average number of beds available in each ward at Daisy Hill hospital in each year since 1990; and what are the projected figures for each ward for each year to 2000. [3965]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the average number of available beds in wards open overnight in the Daisy Hill hospital for the financial years 1989–90 to 1995–6. Projected bed figures are not available.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average waiting period for appointments with (a) resident consultants and (b) non-resident consultants at Daisy Hill hospital, for each discipline, in each year since 1990; and what are the projected figures for each year to 2000. [3960]

Mr. Moss: Information is not available in the format requested. The table shows the number of people who had their first out-patient appointment in the Newry and Mourne HSS trust during the years 1993–94 and 1995–96 and the length of time they waited. Information before 1993–94 and projected figures are not available centrally.

Waiting Times

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the average waiting periods experienced by (a) patients whose services are purchased by their local health board and (b) patients of GP fundholders. [3957]

Mr. Moss: The table shows the number of people admitted as in-patients during the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 and the length of time they had waited. The average waiting time is not calculable because information on patient waiting times is grouped into time bands and is not measured individually.

You will also be interested to know that waiting lists and waiting times generally have been reduced considerably since 1992. For example, in that year, about 3,000 patients were waiting two years or more for admission. In March this year virtually nobody was waiting more than two years while there were 800 waiting more than 18 months. The number of patients treated has risen continually over the same period from a total number of 330,000—ordinary admissions and day cases—in 1991–92 to 400,000 approximately in 1995–96.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the average waiting periods experienced by (a) patients whose services are purchased by each of the health boards and (b) patients of general practitioner fundholders for (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) each health board area and (iii) each hospital trust area. [3958]

Mr. Moss: The tables show the number of people admitted as in-patients during the period 1 April 1995 to 31 March 1996 in Northern Ireland and how long they had waited. The average waiting time is not calculable because information on patient waiting times is grouped in time bands and is measured individually.

BSE

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what percentage and what total amount of BSE eradication and compensation scheme expenditure has been received by (a) farmers, (b) slaughterers, (c) renderers and (d) other recipients; and if he will make a statement; [2160]

(2) what has been the total expenditure to date on the BSE eradication and compensation schemes; and if he will make a statement. [2165]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 6 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 6 November, Official Report, column 582, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Fireworks

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the importation of illegal fireworks into Northern Ireland in the last three years; what seizures have been made; what categories of illegal fireworks have been found; and what was the country of manufacture. [2494]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The Chief Constable has advised me that police made 93 seizures in 1994, 31 in 1995, and that 100 seizures have been made so far this year. Illegal fireworks recovered were from categories 1 (indoor), 2 (garden) and 3 (display) and had been manufactured in China, France, Germany or Austria.

Quantities of illegal fireworks seized in 1996 have amounted to approximately 34 tonnes, a considerable increase on the 1 to 2 tonnes of previous years.

My officials, in consultation with the RUC and others, will be considering what lessons are to be learnt from this year's experience.

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the latest estimates of the expenditure on external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1996 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in. [4064]

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 14 November 1996]: Within the Northern Ireland departments and their agencies, expenditure on all external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992 in 1996 prices is:

1992–93: £22,097,000

1993–94: £31,889,000

1994–95: £26,462,000

1995–96: £25,543,000

As consultants are, in many instances, engaged to contribute particular skills to an element of much larger process, it is not possible to quantify savings which such expenditure has resulted in but, in each instance, consultants were engaged on the basis of best value for money.

Figures for the Northern Ireland Office are not currently available. I shall write to the hon. Member in due course.

Taxation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) individuals and (b) trusts paid capital gains tax in Northern Ireland in the last year for which figures are available. [3941]

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that separate figures for Northern Ireland are not available.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money was received by the Treasury from (a) capital gains tax and (b) inheritance tax in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [3942]

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

Receipts of capital gains tax in the United Kingdom are published in table 1.2 of "Inland Revenue Statistics 1996". I regret that separate figures for Northern Ireland are not available. Receipts of inheritance tax—including capital transfer tax and estate duty—in Northern Ireland for each of the last 10 years are in the table.

Year	Receipts £ million
1986–87	12.4
1987–88	16.5
1988–89	11.0
1989–90	11.0
1990–91	17.1
1991–92	13.4
1992–93	13.7
1993–94	11.5
1994–95	14.8
1995–96	14.8

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of estates granted probate in the last year in Northern Ireland paid inheritance tax. [3940]

Mr. Jack: I have been asked to reply.

It is estimated that in 1995–96 about 4 per cent. of estates for which a grant of representation—or probate—was obtained in Northern Ireland were liable to inheritance tax.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Mammalian Meat and Bonemeal

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what data he collated on the movement of mammalian meat and bonemeal from 12 July 1995 to 12 July 1996; and if he will make a statement; [1359]

(2) what data he collated on the movement of mammalian meat and bonemeal from 12 July to 1 August; and if he will make a statement; [1355]

(3) what data he has collated on the movement of mammalian meat and bonemeal since 1 August 1996; and if he will make a statement. [1360]

Mrs. Browning: Mammalian meat and bonemeal derived from specified bovine material is audited by the State Veterinary Service. No data were collated on the movement of this material during the periods in question which, under the Specified Bovine Materials Order 1996—formerly the Specified Bovine Offals Order 1995—is required to be incinerated or landfilled following production in approved plants. With the introduction of the over-30-months scheme, the Specified Bovine Material Order was amended to allow OTMS carcasses to be processed in SBM rendering lines. As Commission regulation 716/96 requires rendered OTMS material to be destroyed, all of the MBM now produced from these lines is being stored by the Intervention Board pending disposal by the best practicable environmental option. Data collated on the movement of MBM into store during the periods in question are as follows:

	Tonnes
3 May 1996–12 July 1996	7,201
13 July 1996–31 July 1996	15,184
1 August 1996–31 October 1996	67,682

MBM derived from other animal waste is rendered separately in dedicated rendering lines under GB provisions set out in the Animal By-Products Order 1992, as amended. Its production is also audited by the State Veterinary Service. Following the ban on feeding mammalian MBM to all farm animals with effect from 4 April 1996, a proportion of the MBM from this waste stream has been sent by renderers to landfill sites. Some data were collated on the quantities of MBM sent for landfill during part of the periods in question, but these are incomplete and considered unreliable.

Data collated on mammalian MBM, and animal feed containing this, moved under the Government's feed recall scheme during the periods in question is as follows:

	Tonnes
12 July 1995–12 July 1996	6,863
13 July 1996–31 July 1996	4,040
1 August 1996–31 October 1996	4

Arable Area Payments

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was (i) the maximum, (ii) the minimum and (iii) the average payment made under the arable area payments scheme in 1995. [3633]

Mr. Baldry: In the 1995 scheme year, the highest payment under the arable area payments scheme in England was for £2,040,092.26. The smallest payment that could be claimed in 1995 was £80.75, but some claimants may have received less than this because of the application of administrative penalties under the scheme. The average total payment per claim was £24,296.

Renderers and Abattoirs (Prosecutions)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all completed prosecutions initiated by local authority departments against (a) renderers, (b) abattoirs, (c) livestock dealers, (d) animal feed manufacturers and (e) pet food manufacturers for each year since 1990, stating for each the (i) date, (ii) name of the individual or organisation prosecuted, (iii) nature of the charges and (iv) outcome of the prosecution; and if he will make a statement. [3662]

Mrs. Browning: Information on prosecutions conducted by local authorities is not held centrally by this Department. To gather the material together over this period of time would involve disproportionate costs.

Public Interest Immunity

Ms Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what public interest immunity certificates his Department has issued since November 1995. [3713]

Mr. Boswell: The Minister has not issued any public interest immunity certificates since November 1995.

Milk (Dioxins)

Mr. Denham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the complete data arising from the survey of dioxins in milk at industrial sites which were summarised in the MAFF–Department of Health information bulletin published on 31 October. [3916]

Mrs. Browning: The article in the bulletin reported the interim results of the survey. The Ministry did not intend to publish details of the interim results until the survey was completed. However, in this case I will arrange for the data to be placed in the Library once they have been compiled into a suitable form.

Industrial Fishing

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to promote measures in respect of industrial fishing through the European Council of Ministers. [4161]

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 15 November 1996]: In the Fisheries Council I have called for more collaborative research in order to increase our understanding of the impact of industrial fisheries on other species, I have successfully pressed for measures to reduce herring mortality in industrial fisheries in line with advice received from the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, I have urged the need for the next multi-annual guidance programme to deal adequately with the industrial fisheries fleet and I am supporting tighter by-catch rules in the sandeel fishery as part of new technical conservation measures.

Soya Beans

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what applications have been made for licences for the importation of genetically engineered soya beans; and if he will make a statement. [4268]

Mrs. Browning: A marketing consent for a specified type of genetically modified soya bean was granted in May 1996 under the Genetically Modified Organisms (Deliberate Release) Regulations 1992, as amended.

Quarantine

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, column 488, on quarantine regulations, when he expects to make a decision on this matter. [4466]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: At this stage it is not possible to give a date.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of appeals against the disallowance of incapacity benefit for the last financial year were successful; and if he will make a statement. [734]

Mr. Burt: Between 1 June 1995 and 31 March 1996, 45 per cent. of appeals against disallowance of incapacity benefit were decided in favour of the appellant.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Scotland are currently awaiting a hearing for an appeal against an all work test refusal (a) in total and (b) for each benefit office in Scotland; what percentage this represents of total tests at each office; what is the current average waiting time before each appeal is heard; and what action he is taking to expedite appeals. [1358]

Mr. Evans: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

There are 4,423 appeals against incapacity benefit all-work test decisions currently outstanding in Scotland. Individual totals for each office are shown in the table.

The current average waiting time before each appeal is heard in Scotland is 19.22 weeks.

We recently introduced regulations amending the appeals process which should help to reduce the time it takes to clear appeals. The Independent tribunal service, through its change programme, continue to look for ways to improve clearance times.

100 per cent. count of the incapacity benefit system excluding a small number of clerically processed cases. Some credits only cases which existed prior to April 1995 are not included either.

Notes:

1. The number of decisions made includes a small number of credits only cases disallowed as customers failed to return their questionnaire without good cause or failed to attend a medical examination.

2. Some severe disablement allowance cases which were allowed following reference to Benefits Agency Medical Services are included in the decisions.

3. The decision to withdraw benefit is made by the independent adjudication officer.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to introduce revised criteria in respect of the claims for disablement benefit in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema. [2041]

Mr. Roger Evans: A response to the industrial injuries advisory committee's report on chronic bronchitis and emphysema will be made shortly.

Private Pension Schemes

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the average percentage of total costs taken up on entering private pension schemes by (a) fees, charges and administration and (b) occupational and private pension rebates and subsidies (i) in the first year and (ii) at retirement age, for men and women now aged (1) 20, (2) 30, (3) 40 and (4) 50 years. [3047]

Mr. Heald: No such estimates have been undertaken. Given the variety and diversity of occupational and personal pension provision in the United Kingdom, establishing the average percentage of total charges is not possible.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the percentage of total pension payments dependent on the performance of private pension funds (a) currently, (b) in 2010 and (c) in 2020. [3923]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that in 1994, the latest year for which figures are available, approximately 40 per cent. of total pension payments, including the state retirement and earnings-related pensions, were from funded occupational and personal pension schemes.

Comparable projections for 2010 and 2020 are not available.

Old Age Pensions (Budget)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current budget for old—age pensions in England and Wales; and what it was in (a) 1979 and (b) 1990 in equivalent terms. [3092]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is set out in the tables.

Income Support

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners receiving income support as an addition to their income would not be eligible for such support if the basic retirement pension had been increased annually in accordance with earnings since 1980; and what percentage of basic retirement pensioners received supplementary benefit income support in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1995. [3050]

Mr. Heald: It is estimated that some 830,000 benefit units would no longer be eligible for income support in addition to retirement pension if the retirement pension had been increased annually in accordance with earnings since 1980[1]. The estimate increases to 850,000 benefit units if RP had continued to be increased in accordance with the higher of earnings or prices since 1980.

It is estimated that around 22 per cent. of basic retirement pensioners were in benefit units in receipt of supplementary benefit in 1979. The equivalent figure in 1995 for income support is 15 per cent[2].

Note:

Benefit units may be a single person or a couple, plus any dependent children. Either the claimant, their partner, or both claimant and partner may be in receipt of retirement pension.

National Insurance

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on present national insurance contribution rates for employees and employers, what would be the excess of contribution income over benefits, applying the standard assumptions of the Government Actuary, in the years (i) 2000-01, (ii) 2010-11, (iii) 2020-21 and (iv) 2030-31; and what would be the excess in each case if the rate of unemployment was assumed to be (a) 3 per cent. and (b) 8 per cent. [3051]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table. However, I refer the hon. Member to table 10 of HC 160 which reflects the Government Actuary's estimate of the effect on contribution rates of a 2 per cent. change in the unemployment assumption.

Information based on assumed unemployment rates of 3 and 8 per cent. could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) first applications for disability living allowance were refused, (b) appeals against the decision to refuse disability living allowance were made and (c) appeals for disability living allowance were successful in (i) 1994–95 and (ii) 1995–96. [3508]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested as disability living allowance statistics do not distinguish between reviews and appeals for first claims, and reviews and appeals of existing awards. A claim may be successful on review or appeal for a variety of reasons, for example, because additional information has been received or the claimant's condition has deteriorated. Such information as is available is in the table.

Appeals

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals his Department has to reduce the time taken over social security appeals. [2867]

Mr. Roger Evans: We recently introduced regulations amending the appeals process which should help to reduce the time it takes to clear appeals. The independent tribunal service, through its change programme, continues to look for ways to improve clearance times.

Reduced Earnings Allowance

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants possessing documentary evidence of being awarded reduced earnings allowance for life have presented their evidence to the Benefits Agency; how many of these have been compensated; and at what estimated cost to his Department; [4091]

(2) when the (a) investigation and (b) compensation processes into claimants possessing documentary evidence of being awarded reduced earnings allowance for life commenced; and when he expects that they will be completed. [4090]

Mr. Roger Evans: To receive compensation a person must be able to show a financial loss because a commitment was undertaken in reliance on an unconditional official assurance that reduced earnings allowance would continue in payment for life or some other period.

Awards of reduced earnings allowance, for whatever period, are always made subject to the requirements for entitlement continuing to be satisfied. For those over pension age, the condition is that the recipient continues in regular employment or can be treated by regulations as continuing in regular employment. No-one awarded reduced earnings allowance since April 1989 should have been given an unconditional assurance of future payment. I am aware that some such assurances may have been given and that the Benefits Agency is considering claims for compensation from people transferred from reduced earnings allowance to retirement allowance as they arise. To date, none of the four claims considered has satisfied the criteria for payment.

War Pensions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the extra cost to his Department if a national disregard of war pensions were applied by each local authority in England for the purpose of (a) council tax and (b) housing benefit. [4297]

Mr. Roger Evans: Any increase in the mandatory disregards of war pensions in the income-related benefits would apply across all of Great Britain.

It is broadly estimated that the additional cost of a total disregard of all war pensions is (a) £15 million for council tax benefit; and (b) £45 million for housing benefit.[1]

Any increase in these mandatory disregards would also have to apply in the calculation of the other income-related benefits, notably income support. It is estimated that a total disregard of all war pensions for income support purposes would cost around a further £35 million in additional benefit expenditure.

Thus, when these costs are added to the £25 million cost of the present mandatory disregards, it can be seen that, for all the income-related benefits, the estimated overall cost of a mandatory total disregard would be in the region of £120 million. This would be in addition to the estimated £1.4 billion expenditure on war pensions for 1996–97.

Notes:

[1] Estimates are based upon data given in Local Authority subsidy returns for 1994–95; the May 1994 Income Support Quarterly Statistical Enquiry; and the 1991, 1992 and 1993 Family Expenditure Surveys.

The estimates have been uprated to 1996–97 levels.

In compiling these estimates, expenditure has been rounded, where appropriate, to the nearest £5 million.

Estimates are broad order estimates only, due to a lack of comprehensive data.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average cost per head to public funds in respect of social security payments over and above the standard retirement or widow's pension of (a) retirement pensioners generally and (b) retirement pensioners in the last two years of their lives. [4379]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

The cost of social security on the elderly per elderly person per week is £14.

Notes:

Pensioners Living Abroad

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many British pensioners qualified for a state retirement pension in those countries where the pension is frozen at (a) the most recent date for which figures are available and (b) a year previously; and what factors underlie the increase over that period of his estimate of the payment of fully indexed pensions. [4382]

Mr. Heald: In July 1996, the most recent date for which figures are available, United Kingdom state retirement and widow's pensions were paid to 429,647 beneficiaries in countries where the pensions are frozen. Corresponding figures for July 1995 are not available. In January 1995, such pensions were paid to 400,742 beneficiaries. The increase over the period January 1995 to July 1996 in the cost of extending annual cost of living increases to beneficiaries whose pensions are frozen is attributable to (a) the rise in the number of pensioners in receipt of frozen pensions and (b) the increase in benefit rates by 2.2 per cent. in April 1995 and 3.9 per cent. in April 1996.

Contributions Holidays

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for national insurance contributions holidays have been received since April 1995; how many have been successful by standard region and Great Britain as a whole and by (a) gender and (b) ethnicity and specifying the numbers who were (i) registered unemployed, (ii) recipients of a training allowance, (iii) lone parents and (iv) carers. [4434]

Mr. Heald: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

Housing and Council Tax Benefit

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been made for extended payment of housing benefit and council tax benefit and how many have been successful by standard region and Great Britain as a whole and by (a) gender and (b) ethnicity, specifying the numbers who were (i) registered unemployed, (ii) recipients of a training allowance, (iii) lone parents and (iv) carers and the duration of the benefit claim since the inception of the scheme. [4435]

Mr. Roger Evans: Information concerning the gender, ethnicity and duration of claim in respect of housing benefit and council tax benefit extended payments is not collected. The remaining information will be available early next year.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 11 November, Official Report, column 97, if he will calculate the equivalent figures on social security and welfare services in the same form as the Eurostat publication for the period 1994–95. [4546]

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table; only Denmark, Italy and the UK have supplied Eurostat with information for 1994 calculated in this way. The equivalent figures for 1994–95 for the United Kingdom could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Country	General Government expenditure on social security and welfare services as percentage of gross domestic product
Denmark	27.71
Italy	18.32
United Kingdom	16.61

1. Figures are for 1994. 2. The figures shown in the Eurostat publication "General Government accounts and statistics" for Social Security and welfare services include:

Social security and assistance

Administration of payments and funds to compensate for loss of income due to accident, injury, sickness and unemployment and old age pensions.

Allowances for families, guardians' and widows' allowances, public relief and war veterans' benefits.

Welfare services

Child welfare services and institutions.

Homes for, and care of, the aged and disabled.

Family welfare agencies and services.

Other special welfare institutions and organisations.

They do not include "Health affairs and services" as well as some other smaller items which are included in Eurostat social protection totals.

Benefit Take-up Rates

Mr. Bernard Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the next edition of "Income-related Benefits: Estimates of Take-up", will be published. [5065]

Mr. Roger Evans: "Income-related Benefits: Estimates of Take-up in 1994–95" have been published today by the Government statistical service. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Benefits Agency (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the future of the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency offices; and what changes in provision of services have taken place in the previous 12 months in respect of these offices. [3389]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Cummings, dated 15 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will make a statement on the future of the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency offices; and what changes in provision of services have taken place in the previous 12 months in respect of these offices.

As with other Districts, North Durham District, which includes the offices at Peterlee and Seaham, is required to review the services it provides to ensure that the most effective service is given within the resources available. There are no current plans to close either Peterlee or Seaham offices.

Management responsibility for Seaham Branch Office will transfer from North Durham District to Wearside District with effect from 1st April 1997. It is proposed that a number of claims processing staff will transfer from Seaham Branch Office to the new purpose-built Sunderland District Office. The service to customers at Seaham Branch Office will, however, remain unchanged. Customers will continue to receive the full benefit service.

The provision of service to our customers has changed in the last 12 months to accommodate the introduction of JSA. This benefit is paid and processed via Employment Services Jobcentres (ESJ). Benefits Agency staff are now employed in local ESJ premises for this purpose at both Peterlee and Seaham. While some processing functions have been re-organised, no changes have been made in the local service delivery to our customers during the last twelve months.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications the CSA has received for departure from the formula for capital settlement; and how many have been approved. [4421]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 15 November 1996:

I am replying to you Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about Child Support Agency Departures.

In April 1995, the Agency successfully implemented changes for cases where property or capital settlements were an issue. A broad based allowance in exempt income was introduced to recognise that a transfer had taken place, and to avoid the need for lengthy and detailed investigation of the cases involved. To date the Agency has processed over 12,000 applications and over 4,200 allowances have been awarded under this provision. This measure was introduced as a forerunner to the Departures system, which will allow either parent to request detailed consideration of the circumstances of their case.

In April this year the Agency started a trial of the Departures system in the area covered by the Agency Centre in Hastings. So far, around 2,300 applications have been received and the Agency has made decisions in over 80% of the cases. Applications are still being received and the trial will continue up to 2 December 1996, when the full Departures scheme is scheduled to be introduced.

The Agency has had 158 requests for a Departure specifically on the grounds of a property or capital transfer. The Agency has made decisions on 96 of these applications so far and 7 awards have resulted. Of the cases refused, around a quarter were ineligible for a Departure as the amount of the transfer was less than £5,000. The cases where a decision is yet to be made require detailed examination of court orders and related papers to resolve complex issues, such as determining whether property or capital was equally owned and which elements of the transfer were for spousal as opposed to child maintenance.

Decisions made under the trial exercise have no effect on the maintenance payable at this stage. From 2 December 1996, clients who applied as part of the trial will be asked if they wish their applications to proceed under the full scheme.

I hope this is helpful.

War Widows Pensions

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, what estimate he has made of his total liability for war widow's pension from the changes brought in by the Pensions Act 1995 since 19 July 1995; and what has been the actual expenditure over that period. [183]

Mr. Heald [pursuant to his reply, 4 November 1996, Official Report, c. 384]: The information that I gave regarding the estimated cost of restoration of war widows pensions was incorrect. The correct information is as follows:

The estimated cost of restoration of war widows pensions under the Pensions Act 1995 to the end of September 1996 is £40 million.

Information on actual expenditure to date on such pensions is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Prisoners of War

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to pay reparations to ex-service personnel who were prisoners of war in Japan. [4304]

Mr. Hanley: Compensation for former prisoners of war was legally settled in the 1951 San Francisco peace treaty. This provided for the proceeds of Japanese assets held by the allies to be used for reparations.

Through the war pensions scheme administered by the Department of Social Security, we have in place a comprehensive system of compensation for anyone disabled as a result of service in the armed forces. Far-eastern former prisoners of war are eligible for the basic war disablement pension and the wide range of supplementary allowances.

Nicaragua

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from observers to the recent elections in Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement. [4583]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: The 93-strong EU observer mission, including Dr. David Browning from Oxford university as the United Kingdom's independent observer, concluded that the elections, although not flawless, were conducted in a fair and transparent manner and contributed to the further consolidation of democracy. The Organisation of American States observer mission took a similar view. Dr. Browning has reported separately that the Nicaraguan people were allowed a free, fair and secret vote. Copies of the EU declaration and a of Dr. Browning's report will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

United Nations

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list United Kingdom contributions to (a) the United Nations and (b) its agencies in 1995–96; and what is the estimated contribution for 1996–97. [4668]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: Details of United Kingdom contributions to the UN and its specialised agencies in 1995 will be placed in the Libraries of the House. Figures for the financial year 1995–96 are not available because they are calculated by calendar year.

Contributions in 1996 and 1997 are expected to be broadly similar.

UNESCO

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to be able to make a statement on United Kingdom membership of UNESCO. [4705]

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: We have no immediate plans to rejoin UNESCO. This issue is being kept under review in the light of progress with reform in the organisation and other financial priorities.

Ghana

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that the forthcoming presidential and parliamentary elections in Ghana will be free and fair. [4844]

Dr. Liam Fox: We have provided £600,000 for optical scanners and 11 million voter registration forms. We will send four observers as part of the EU observer mission and will participate in a separate Commonwealth mission.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Joint Funding Scheme

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications were made to the joint funding scheme in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97; and how many were successful. [4630]

Dr. Liam Fox: In 1995–96, 359 project applications were made to the joint funding scheme, of which 132 were successful. In 1996–97, 279 applications were received, of which 137 were successful.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the number of joint funding scheme contracts issued by country and region in (a) 1995–96 and (b) 1996–97. [4629]

Dr. Fox: Details of projects for which funding agreements were issued under the joint funding scheme in 1995–96 and 1996–97, by country and by region, are as listed.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4525]

Dr. Liam Fox: In considering project proposals, ODA programme managers are required to consider the need for environmental analysis and audit as set out in "Manual of Environmental Appraisal", a copy of which is in the House Library. ODA supports the demonstration and promotion of environmental auditing as part of its development programmes in a number of countries.

Examples are environmental audit by British Steel of a Zimbabwe Steel Corporation—ZISCO—site as part of an aid and trade provision funded privatisation programme; Audits have also been commissioned for ODA projects in Guyana, privatisation of industrial sectors; in India, potential environmental liabilities associated with power sector reform.

With regard to the promotion of improved efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing, ODA is providing technical assistance to assess the environmental impacts of the Ventanas copper smelter, Chile, upon people living in surrounding areas. The environmental audit of the smelter identified low-cost—no-cost options to manage solid, liquid and gaseous wastes.

In Egypt, ODA is supporting the development and application of environmental auditing skills in three sectors—textiles, oil and soap, and food—through audits of 36 sites, identification of low-cost or no-cost solutions to environmental problems, financial support in the implementation of demonstration projects and training for factory staff and private sector—environmental consultants.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of grant aid to Sri Lanka. [4303]

Dr. Liam Fox: We expect to spend nearly £8 million this financial year.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Immigration Rules

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were prohibited from entering the United Kingdom under paragraph 320 of the immigration rules in each year since 1979; and on what grounds. [3684]

Mr. Kirkhope: The statistics available on reasons for refusal relate only to passengers refused and removed at ports in the United Kingdom since 1988. Those reasons for refusal which are wholly or partly linked to paragraph 320 of the rules are given in the table. Corresponding information for earlier years and for entry clearance refusals is not available.

Battersea Fire Station

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will accept the decision of the London fire and civil defence authority not to retain a second fire appliance at Battersea fire station. [3976]

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sutton and Cheam (Lady O. Maitland) on 16 October 1996, Official Report, column 1008. I understand from the authority that no such decision has been taken.

Violent Videos

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies have been (i) carried out and (ii) commissioned by his Department into the effectiveness of the enforcement of the current law on the availability of violent videos to children. [4464]

Mr. Sackville: We are aware of no studies directed specifically at the effectiveness of the enforcement of the current law on the availability of violent videos to children. However, last year my right hon. and learned Friend commissioned research by the university of Birmingham into the effects of videos on the behaviour of young offenders. The results of the research are expected to be published in October 1997.

Earlier this month, in view of the considerable public concern about the level of violence portrayed in videos, my right hon. and learned Friend asked the British Board of Film Classification for a report on the action the board is taking now to reduce the level of violence in videos; the steps it is taking to assess the level of public concern over the issue of violence in videos; and how, for the future, the board plans to adapt its processes and approach to continue properly to discharge its duties under the Video Recordings Act 1984. The report is expected next month.

Fire Service

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the land area of each fire authority in England is designated as C and D risk. [4398]

Mr. Sackville: Information on fire risk category areas is published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. The latest available figures can be found on page 8 of "Fire Service Statistics 1996", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many firefighters have lost their lives since 1990 when attending building fires in designated C and D risk areas. [4397]

Mr. Sackville: From 1 January 1990 to 13 November 1996, eight firefighters have died in fires that started in buildings in designated C or D risk areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which fire authorities in England currently provide a level of service in excess of the Home Office's recommended minimum standards of fire cover. [4399]

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally in the form requested. Statutory responsibility for the provision of an efficient fire service rests with individual fire authorities. It is for the authority to decide whether it wishes to provide fire cover at a level above the national recommended standards.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total expenditure for the last financial year by his Department on defending cases of habeas corpus for asylum seekers held in custody. [4671]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available.

Ethnic Minorities

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about future arrangements for (a) section 11 funding in Birmingham, (b) pupil support projects in Birmingham and (c) its Home Office grant. [5004]

Mr. Kirkhope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave on 13 November 1996, Official Report, column 242.

European Court of Justice

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the role of the European Court of Justice in future third pillar conventions; and what conclusions the Government have reached regarding the role of the court in relation to the conventions on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests and on the use of information technology for customs purposes. [5171]

Mr. Howard: The Government's policy on the role of the European Court of Justice in respect of conventions negotiated under the third pillar of the treaty on European Union is to consider each case on its merits. But we and our European Union partners recognised in agreeing to the protocol to the Europol convention that the best way forward in that case lay in a flexible formula under which member states could choose whether to make a declaration that they were prepared to accept the jurisdiction of the court to give preliminary rulings as to the interpretation of the convention on the basis of references by their national courts. As regards the role of the ECJ in the conventions on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests and on the use of information technology for customs purposes, the Government have concluded that they can agree to a flexible solution on similar lines to that in the Europol convention protocol.

Accordingly, we shall signal our agreement to the draft protocols for this purpose prepared by the Irish presidency, which would enable member states to make a declaration accepting ECJ jurisdiction to give preliminary rulings as to the interpretation of these conventions on the basis of references by national courts. We shall make it clear that it would not be the United Kingdom's intention to make such a declaration in respect of our own courts.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Refurbishment Costs

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 220, if he will (a) set out the objectives and (b) estimate the total individual costs of (i) the second phase of the overhaul of carriage gates, (ii) the external painting and roof repairs at Norman Shaw North, (iii) the repairs carried out to the supporting structure of the Prince's Chamber ceiling, (iv) provision of improved storage in the Library cellars, (v) an improved sales counter at the Speaker's bookstall, (vi) the new pulpit on the main committee corridor and (vii) other projects. [4704]

Sir Raymond Powell: The policy objectives and forecast in-year costs relating to work in the House of Commons are as follows:

Project	Objective	In-year cost to the House £	In-year cost total £
(i) Second phase of overhaul of carriage gates	I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 7 November 1996, Official Report, column 607.
(ii) External painting and roof repairs at Norman Shaw North	To maintain the roof and exterior paintwork	175,000	175,000
(iii) The Prince's Chamber is administered by the House of Lords, for which I have no responsibility.
(iv) Provision of improved storage in the Library	To provide improved storage and meet health and safety requirements	40,000	40,000
(v) Improved sales counter at Speaker's bookstall	To improve facilities for Members and their visitors	16,000	16,000
(vi) New pulpit on main Committee Corridor	To provide a more effective working area for staff and include access for IT facilities	16,200	27,000
(vii) Other projects	My Committee's policy objective is to achieve exemplary standards of maintenance by carrying out appropriate conservation, maintenance and improvements having regard to health, safety, energy conservation, environmental issues and the historic fabric

Paintings (Restoration)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee, pursuant to his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 221, if he will list the 35 oil paintings that have been restored since July in the House, indicating the restoration cost of each painting. [4706]

Sir Raymond Powell: The paintings are those situated in the Strangers and Members Dining Rooms, the Pugin Room, the Smoking Room and the Tea Room. It is not possible to give the cost of restoring each painting separately since the work was done under a single sum contract.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to the Government's response to recommendations 11 and 30 of the second report of the Public Service Committee, on ministerial accountability and responsibility, HC 67 Session 1996–97, if he will introduce proposals to remove the rules relating to the form and content of parliamentary questions. [3885]

Mr. Newton: The recommendations in the Public Service Committee's report, and the Government's response, relate to the answering of parliamentary questions. The recommendations and the responses do not bear on the rules of the House on whether questions are admissible or are in order. If the hon. Member has proposals for change in these rules, he may wish to draw them to the attention of the Procedure Committee.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Repossessions (Northern Ireland)

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many homes in Northern Ireland have been repossessed in each of the last 10 years. [3853]

Mr. Streeter: The number of writs and originating summonses issued in respect of mortgages by the Chancery Division of the Northern Ireland High Court for each of the last 10 years as follows:

1985: 1,170
1986: 1,545
1987: 2,047
1988: 2,201
1989: 2,459
1990: 2,599
1991: 3,061
1992: 1,646
1993: 1,728
1994: 1,372
1995: 1,220

There are no reliable figures available on the number of decrees for possession granted on foot of these.

The enforcement of judgments office, which is responsible for delivering vacant possession in Northern Ireland, has received the following number of applications to enforce an order for repossession of land for each year over the period:

1988: 657
1989: 718
1990: 748
1991: 832
1992: 683
1993: 492
1994: 468
1995: 396

The figures relating to the number of these which resulted in actual repossessions taking place are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Legal Aid

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) for what reasons the Legal Aid Board has refused to disclose to the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington (a) the total amount Mr. X, whose name has been sent to him, has received in legal aid during the past five years and (b) the amount he is due to pay back for such aid which was wrongfully assigned; [4206]

(2) what remedy is available to a person who is sued in court under custody proceedings who cannot afford to employ a solicitor and who faces counsel retained by the litigant who is on legal aid; [4130]

(3) for what reasons the Legal Aid Board has granted legal aid to Mr. X, whose name has been sent to him, for contact and parental responsibility proceedings while the mother of his two children has been refused assistance with legal costs; and what account was taken of her income in assessing her eligibility for legal aid. [4207]

Mr. Streeter: I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the highest amount of legal aid granted to a litigant in the last five years. [4120]

Mr. Streeter: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, in 1995–96 the largest total payment in a criminal case amounted to £2,946,000, which was paid to lawyers representing a defendant involved in a serious fraud trial. The largest payment in a civil case in the same year was £531,246 in a personal injury case, although the net cost of this case to the fund was nil.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Marchioness Incident

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received in the past 12 months from survivors of the sinking of the Marchioness, their relatives, friends and legal advisers; and if he will make a statement. [4305]

The Attorney General: Representations have mainly taken the form of questions by hon. Members in this House and in another place about the progress of the review undertaken by the Crown Prosecution Service, which earlier this year re-examined the evidence given to the inquest jury in combination with the pre-inquest evidence. The Director of Public prosecutions announced on 26 July 1996 that the evidence was insufficient to justify any further criminal proceedings.

I have received no subsequent representations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Potato Industry Development Council

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the result of the consultation on a proposal to establish a Potato Industry Development Council for Great Britain. [5464]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Our industry-wide consultation revealed overwhelming support for such a body. Therefore, with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales, I have decided to set up a Potato Industry Development Council for Great Britain.

The council will be responsible for:

commissioning or assisting research and development;

the collection and dissemination of statistical information; promotion including the development of exports; and promoting standard products and better defining trade descriptions and consistency in their use.

The council will be funded by a dual statutory levy—an area levy on growers and a tonnage contribution charged at the first point of sale and paid by those purchasing potatoes.

It is our intention that the order establishing the council, which will be made under the Industrial Organisation and Development Act 1947, will be laid before Parliament later this year.

Surplus Food Scheme

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for a surplus food scheme in 1997. [5465]

Mr. Baldry: Yes. We intend to implement a surplus food scheme in 1997. The scheme will involve UK intervention beef only. It will be supplied in the form of canned stew steak, as was the case in 1995, and will be distributed to those on income support, family credit, jobseeker's allowance, the homeless and destitute and those living in welfare hostels.

The scheme will involve up to 8,000 tonnes of beef containing no offal which will come from animals of less than 30 months of age. All this beef will have been purchased into intervention since April 1996.

I hope that charitable organisations will find the surplus beef to be a help in their efforts.

Woodlands

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what research his Department has (a) planned, (b) commissioned and (c) evaluated with regard to integrating proposals to increase deciduous woodland with the creation of woodland-based manufacturing economies; what financial commitments his Department has made in this area; and if he will make a statement; [3229]

(2) what further support his Department proposes to promote existing projects currently experimenting with the integration of woodland-based manufacturing economies with an increase in the planting of deciduous woodland; and what assessment he has made of the advantages of supporting existing projects. [3225]

Mr. Boswell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 18 November, Official Report, columns 399–400, by the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, my hon. Friend the Member for Kincardine and Deeside (Mr. Kynoch).

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) his Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3802]

Mr. Boswell: Records held centrally show that neither the core Department nor any of its agencies or associated bodies have held contracts with EDS since 1985. Consequently, there are no values, completion and modification details or in-house working to be reported. No job reductions in the Department fall to be reported, therefore.

Tree Planting

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to continue with initiatives encouraging tree planting in England. [3120]

Mr. Boswell: We shall continue to encourage tree planting in England. As stated in our recent White paper "Rural England—A Nation Committed to a Living Countryside", we would like to see the area of woodland doubled over the next 50 years, subject to the necessary changes in the common agricultural policy.

Beef Consumption

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 583, on the use of beef in processed food, if he will set out the arrangement for the removal authorised by the regulation, and the basis of the legal requirement to destroy beef held in intervention prior to 29 March. [4495]

Mrs. Browning: Beef held in intervention store on 27 March 1996 has been identified and, in accordance with regulation (EC) 1757/96, is being held separately from beef purchased after 27 March. Incineration will take place as soon as sufficient capacity can be identified. In any event, destruction must be completed by 31 March 1997. Article 23 of Council regulation (EEC) 805/68 provides the legal base for this destruction. None of the beef purchased before 27 March will be released for human consumption.

BSE

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 581, for what reasons 24.9 per cent. of the BSE cases reported between January and March were not subsequently confirmed; what changes in the procedure used have been introduced since then; and what percentage of reported cases were subsequently conformed. [4494]

Mrs. Browning: The hon. Member for Wakefield who is familiar with the way BSE statistics are compiled will of course be aware that the figure given for BSE reported cases necessarily includes cases which recover are alternatively diagnosed and which are still under restriction.

As at 18 November for the period January to March 1996, 4,065 BSE suspect cases were reported in the United Kingdom. Of this figure 2,969 or 73 per cent. cases have been confirmed and 764 or 19 per cent. have proved negative. The difference is accounted for by inconclusive results, alternative diagnosis, animals which have recovered, animals still under restriction and pending results.

For 1993 to 1995, BSE was confirmed in approximately 83 per cent. of the suspects compulsorily slaughtered—average figure for 1993 to 1995. Details of the 1996 confirmation rate will be provided in the November progress report, a copy of which should be placed in the Library of the House in December. This will include details provided in previous reports which indicate seasonal and age related variations in diagnostic rate. The period in question represents the period of each year when diagnostic rate is lowest.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield of 6 November, Official Report, columns 581–82, on experiments on BSE infectivity, what assessment he has made of the susceptibility of the mice challenged with BSE, relative to the susceptibility of other animals to comparable diseases. [4496]

Mrs. Browning: It is accepted among specialists in this field that there is a likely 3 log difference in sensitivity between the mouse model used for bioassay and assay directly in calves. A specific experiment intended to quantify that difference is still in progress, and while final interpretation is therefore not possible the evidence so far does appear to support the assumption of a 3 log difference.

The same experiment also highlights the compromises that have to be made by using laboratory models in that mouse assays provide results sooner than cattle assays when testing tissues which contain low levels of infectivity, if any at all. Cattle inoculated intracerebrally with pooled lymph nodes or spleen are still clinically healthy 45 months later, but a negative end point will take a further 39 months to achieve. Mouse models currently in use are capable of detecting scrapie in sheep tissues outside the central nervous system. Furthermore, BSE transmits more effectively from central nervous tissue to mice than do known strains of scrapie. It therefore seems logical that the failure to produce a spongiform encephalopathy in mice by the inoculation of bovine tissue indicates at the very least that the level of infectivity in the source tissue is extremely low, and lower than seen with scrapie. It is not simply a reflection of an inefficient model.

Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the current level of support for the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research and that for each of the last 10 years, at current prices. [4730]

Mr. Boswell: The Institute of Grassland and Environment Research was not established until 1989. Using the gross domestic product deflator—1995–96 = 100—as provided by the Treasury, payments made to the institute by the Ministry, at constant prices, in respect of research and development projects are as follows:

	£000
1990–91	10.8
1991–92	8.1
1992–93	7.7
1993–94	7.8
1994–95	7.6
1995–96	7.4
1996–97[1]	6.7

[1] Estimate only.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what plans he has to alter the current level of support for the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research; and if he will make a statement; [4732]

(2) if he will list the projected level of support for the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research in current prices for the next three financial years. [4731]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry funds research to support its policies, and regularly appraises its research programme and the funding arrangements it has with contractors to ensure policy needs are met.

Final figures on Ministry funding at the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research for 1997–98 and beyond are not yet available, but it is apparent that the level is likely to be reduced. IGER has been made aware that certain projects coming to the end of their contracts in March 1997 will not be renewed. These decisions follow full and detailed review and represent re-prioritisation of the programme. Some of the funding released will be redirected to other priorities but some will go to open competition in the same area, thereby providing opportunities for IGER to submit new research proposals and bid for further funding.

Butter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that easy-spread butter is available to British consumers at the same price as ordinary butter. [4369]

Mrs. Browning: The European Commission has concluded that spreadable butter is ineligible for the preferential rate of duty which applies to imports of butter from New Zealand under the general agreement on tariffs and trade current access quota. This is a commercial matter which the New Zealand authorities are pursuing bilaterally with the Commission. Meantime, HM Customs and Excise has been notified of the Commission's conclusion and is acting upon it.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what time his Department's inspectors at Dover boarded the MV Cap Afrique to speak to the captain of the ship about the prevailing weather conditions on 6 November. [4247]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: Between 1430 and 1500 hours.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep were exported from the United Kingdom between July and October, inclusive, with the place of loading stated as (a) Abbotsland farm, Capel Le Ferne, Kent, (b) Lydden Court farm, Lydden, Kent, (c) Homestead farm, Petham, Kent, (d) Uffington Court farm, Adisham, Kent and (e) Coxhill farm, Shepherdswell, Kent on the export health certificate. [4249]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: The total number of sheep exported between July and October, inclusive, from these premises is:

	Number
Abbotsland	129,304
Lydden Court	77,687
Homestead	90,717
Uffington	24,121
Coxhill	47,462
Total	369,291

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) which bodies his Department's inspectors at Dover consulted as to whether animals boarding the MV Cap Afrique for sailing on 6 November would be likely to be caused unnecessary suffering or injury while at sea under the terms of the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1996; and what decision they reached; [4246]

(2) what steps his Department's inspectors took to ensure that the master of the Cap Afrique exercised his judgment in accordance with article 11 of the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1996 on 6 November; and what factors led them to agree that it was acceptable for the MV Cap Afrique to sail at the time it sailed. [4248]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: Information was sought from the Meteorological Office, HM Coastguard at Dover, the Dover harbour board port control office and the animal health and welfare veterinary section at the Ministry's headquarters. The master of the vessel was also consulted. The vessel sailed at approximately 1700 hours with 27 livestock vehicles.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons he has instructed (a) that live animals exported for fattening may be sent to the staging post Ryckewaert-Arnout, Loker in Belgium and (b) animals for slaughter are prohibited from being sent. [4252]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: At the request of the Belgian authorities, animals for immediate slaughter are not consigned to these premises.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many audits of the work of local veterinary inspectors have been undertaken by his officials during (a) July, (b) August and (c) September for consignments of live sheep for export certified in the area of Dover. [1979]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 November 1996]: During the month of July, Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food officials undertook audits of the work of local veterinary inspectors concerning the certification of live sheep for export on three days. The audits took place on two days during August and on two days during September.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many supervised loadings were undertaken by his officials in the area of Dover; and on what dates during (a) July, (b) August and (c) September. [1980]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 4 November 1996]: During the months of July, August and September, no supervised loadings at lairages were undertaken by Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food officials in the area of Dover. During those months, officials inspected consignments of sheep at the point of loading on to the ship on the following dates:

July 5

FU Animal Welfare Inspections

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when an inspector from the European Commission last visited Britain in respect of animal welfare matters; which areas and which types of premises the inspector visited; in respect of which EC directives; and if he will make a statement. [4164]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 15 November 1996]: From 4 to 7 November an inspector visited a range of premises and facilities in Britain in respect of directive 91/628/EEC.

Cattle Certification

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many bovines animals were identified by his Department as having false or concealed identities on the first day of the special operation in the ports of Stranraer and Cairnryan; and if he will make a statement. [2692]

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 7 November 1996]: During a portal check at Stranraer and Cairnryan on Monday 28 October 1996, a consignment of 34 bovine animals was returned to Northern Ireland due to inadequate certification. The matter is under investigation.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice his Department is circulating to Government Departments about the implementation of the working time directive. [4921]

Mr. Freeman: Officials have circulated advice to Departments and agencies. I have arranged for a copy of this advice to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

TRANSPORT

Donaldson Report

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the recommendations of the Donaldson report which were referred to in his answer of 14 March, Official Report, column 721, as under consideration (a) are to be included in the proposed Merchant Shipping and Maritime Security Bill and (b) have been implemented to date; and if he will make a statement. [3507]

Mr. Bowis: The Government have accepted 91 of the Donaldson report's 103 recommendations and rejected only four. Eight remain under consideration. Of these, the Merchant Shipping and Maritime Security Bill includes enabling powers to take forward recommendations 95 and 96, proposing charges for port state control inspections and emergency response. There is no intention of charging for marine search and rescue.

A progress report giving details of the action taken as at 31 October on all the recommendations in the Donaldson report has been placed in the Library of the House.

Merchant Shipping (Waste Facilities)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the responses made to date to his Department's merchant shipping notice M1659 on the provision of waste reception facilities. [4127]

Mr. Bowis: Merchant shipping notice M1659 gave guidance to ports on the development of waste management plans; to date, 55 plans covering 67 ports have been received.

Aircraft Noise (London)

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many aeroplanes have landed at Heathrow airport in 1996 before (a) 5 am, (b) 5.30 am, (c) 6 am, (d) 6.30 am and (e) 7 am. [3913]

Mr. Bowis: Records are not kept in the format requested, but I am able to provide the number of arrivals between 1 January and 31 October prior to 5 am, between 5.01 and 6 am, and between 6.01 am and 7 am. These figures have been taken from the London (Heathrow) airport runway utilisation logs produced by National Air Traffic Services.

Arrivals at Heathrow between midnight and 7.00 am (local time) 1 January 1996 to 31 October 1996

Midnight to 5 am: 1,419
5.01 to 6 am: 2,358
6.01 to 7 am: 9,025

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed legal challenge by the International Air Transport Association on the implementation date for the new aircraft noise limits at Heathrow and Gatwick airports. [4363]

Mr. Bowis: None.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the proposals put before the European Commission on 6 November to amend the environmental and safety requirements for vessels carrying irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium and high–level radioactive waste. [3917]

Mr. Bowis: An explanatory memorandum has been placed in the Library of the House on the Commission's proposal for a Council directive amending directive 93/75/EEC concerning minimum requirements for vessels bound for or leaving Community ports and carrying dangerous or polluting goods. The Government are not aware of any other current proposals to or by the Commission relating to the carriage by sea of irradiated nuclear fuel, plutonium or high–level radioactive wastes.

MV Derbyshire

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many contractors were invited to tender for the phase 2 survey of the MV Derbyshire; how many contractors submitted tenders; what were the names of the contractors; what criteria were used to evaluate the tenders; and on what basis the contract was awarded to the Woods Hole institute. [4257]

Mr. Bowis: The project managers and the technical assessors to the Department and the European Commission advised that the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution is the organisation best qualified, in terms of photographic and sonar technology and experience, to meet the objectives of phase 2. In light of this advice the Department and the European Commission agreed that the work should be carried out by Woods Hole.

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the specifications drafted for phases 1 and 2 of the survey of the MV Derbyshire. [4258]

Mr. Bowis: I have placed in the Library copies of the specification for phase 1 and of the latest specification for phase 2.

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total cost of the phase 1 survey of the MV Derbyshire; and what is the estimated cost of the phase 2 survey. [4261]

Mr. Bowis: The cost of the at sea element of the phase 1 survey was approximately £0.175 million. The at sea and post-return data processing elements of the phase 2 survey are expected to cost £1.75 million.

Mr. Dixon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the assessors' report of the phase 1 survey of the MV Derbyshire. [4260]

Mr. Bowis: I have placed in the Library the brief produced by the assessors on their return on the conduct and results of the phase 1 survey. Nothing further is being published but interested parties have had access to all the video material recorded during phase 1.

Parking Meters (Enforcement)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the gross costs and charges of parking meter enforcement ceased to be part of the public accounts. [4357]

Mr. Bowis: Drivers who exceed the permitted time at a parking meter may incur an initial excess charge, subsequently followed by a penalty charge. Excess charges have always accrued to the local authority, which must maintain a separate account of income and expenditure arising from on-street parking places. Penalty charges are generally enforced by the serving by traffic wardens of a fixed penalty notice imposing a fine payable into court.

Where local authorities have assumed responsibility for on-street parking enforcement under the Road Traffic Act 1991, penalty charge notices are, however, issued by local authority-employed parking attendants and the income is retained by the authority. All London boroughs had taken on this responsibility by July 1994, but outside London only Hampshire county council, in respect of the city of Winchester, has yet done so.

Railway Accident (Stafford)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what compensation arrangements have been offered to the owners of property alongside the railway as a result of the railway accident at Stafford; and in what ways these arrangements differ from those which British Rail used to make in similar circumstances. [4503]

Mr. Watts: Compensation for property owners suffering loss as a result of any railway accident is a matter between them and whoever may be found liable for the accident. Claims will continue to be dealt with on the basis of liability.

There will be no disadvantage to those suffering injury or loss simply because there is no longer one railway operator. Arrangements have been in place from 1 April 1994 for third parties suffering injury and loss on the railways to claim against a single, industry-controlled, agency, Railway Claims Ltd., created for the purpose, rather than to identify and claim against one or more operators. These arrangements are supervised by the Rail Regulator, who requires all licensed rail operators, which include Railtrack, to join these claims handling and allocation arrangements, and to maintain adequate insurance.

In the case of the Stafford accident, however, a privately owned freight wagon was involved. Private wagon owners are not licensed operators of trains and therefore cannot be obliged by the Rail Regulator to be part of the claims allocation and handling arrangements. However, that is no different from the situation before restructuring, when such owners, which have never been part of British Rail, were accountable for their own actions.

Stevenage Railway Station (Incident)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the Health and Safety Executive's inspectorate has to publish the report into the incident which occurred at Stevenage railway station on 10 and 11 August 1996. [4502]

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is currently investigating these two incidents. At present, the HSE has no plans to publish a report.

Barking to Gospel Oak Line

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the visit of the Minister for Railways and Roads to the Barking to Gospel Oak line on 28 October, what conclusions he has reached in respect of the ability of the line to produce an improved passenger service; and if he will make a statement. [4666]

Mr. Watts: My visit confirmed my view that the franchising of North London Railways, the operator of the Barking–Gospel Oak branch, will not only safeguard the current level of service on the line, but will bring about major improvements in its performance. My hon. Friend the Minister for Transport in London gave details of the franchising director's plans for the franchising of NLR in his oral answer to the hon. Member on 28 October, Official Report, columns 324–25.

Not least among the benefits of franchising will be the replacement of all the rolling stock currently operating on the branch by the year 2000. I understand that Railtrack is to embark on a strategic study of the Barking to Gospel Oak route, to assess the scope for further developing its use by passenger and freight traffic.

A1 (North London)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what were the (a) traffic volumes, (b) traffic speeds and (c) bus speeds on the A1 (Archway road) to Upper street, Angel, N1, (i) before it attained red route status and (ii) at present. [4667]

Mr. Bowis: Comprehensive surveys carried out for the Department of Transport on the section of the A1 from Archway road to the Angel showed the following:

		All day average
	Volume pcu[1]/hr/ direction	Traffic speed km/hr	Bus speed km/hr
Before red route surveys October 1990	1,160	16.7	12.9
After red route surveys October 1991	1,250	20.1	14.7

[1] pcu = passenger car unit.

No further surveys of an equivalent nature have been carried out.

Plymouth–Heathrow Flights

Mr. Jaimeson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances he would be prepared to ring-fence the slots for flights between Plymouth airport and Heathrow. [3947]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 14 November 1996]: The Government do not consider it appropriate to ring-fence airport slots for domestic routes, as this would distort the aviation market.

Dartford River Crossing

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the value of the public sector cost comparator for the Dartford river crossing (a) before and (b) after adjustment for risk transfer considerations; and on what dates these figures were first calculated. [4547]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 18 November 1996]: I have asked the chief executive of Highways Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours, dated 19 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your recent question about the value of the public sector comparator for the Dartford River Crossing.

A separate public sector comparator was not necessary in this case because bids to design, build, finance and operate the new Queen Elizabeth II Bridge and to operate and maintain the existing Dartford Tunnels were invited on the basis of both public and private procurement methods.

Rail Routing Guide

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints have been received about the routing guide recently published by the franchising director and the Rail Regulator. [4548]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Since the routing guide became operational on 29 September, 36 complaints have been received by my Department, the Office of Passenger Rail Franchising and the Office of the Rail Regulator. The guide has been improved experimentally for a period of eight months, and may be amended in the light of experience.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 19 November. [3520]

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 19 November. [3519]

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

ENVIRONMENT

Sustainable Development

14. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his assessment of the desirability of issuing planning policy guidance on the subject of sustainable development based on the recommendations made in agenda 21. [3131]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Planning policy guidance has been progressively updated to take account of sustainable development. My Department is also preparing a better practice guide on how to implement sustainable development more effectively through the planning system to be published next year.

Rio Treaty

17. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the measures the Government have taken to implement the Rio treaty of June 1992. [3134]

Mr. Clappison: The UK has met its commitments in full under the action plan initiated by the Prime Minister following Rio and agreed by European and G7 colleagues.

Local Authority Housing

18. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what policies exist for maximising investment in local authority housing. [3135]

Mr. Curry: In 1996–97 under the housing investment programme £1.2 billion was allocated to local authorities in a competitive process which directed resources to those authorities best able to make use of them. This competitive system encourages local authorities to consider all available mechanisms for the provision of social housing in their area and increase the contribution made by private finance.

27. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities transferred (a) all and (b) part of their housing stock to new landlords in the last year. [3144]

Mr. Curry: The 1995 large-scale voluntary transfer programme included 11 local authorities which transferred all or part of their housing stock to 12 registered housing associations. Of these, four were partial transfers. In the current—1996—programme two local authorities have transferred their housing stock to two registered housing associations. One of these was a partial stock transfer and the other a whole stock transfer. A further three authorities propose to transfer all their stock by the end of this financial year.

Rough Sleepers Initiative

19. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to further extend the rough sleepers initiative. [3136]

Mr. Curry: In answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Mr. Merchant) on 31 October, Official Report, column 187, I described the Government's plans to expand the rough sleepers initiative in London, extend it to Brighton and establish a new rough sleepers revenue fund. Together with the extension of the rough sleepers initiative to Bristol earlier this year, these measures demonstrate the Government's commitment to ensuring that there is no necessity for people to sleep rough.

Local Authority Spending

20. Ms Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met local authority leaders to discuss the Government's contribution to local authority spending. [3137]

Sir Paul Beresford: My hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the leaders of the local authority associations at the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance on 16 October to discuss the prospects for the 1997–98 settlement. He is also due to meet the chairman of the local authority associations this afternoon, 19 November, and the 1997–98 local government finance settlement will be one of the items on the agenda.

Private Finance Initiative

21. Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to encourage local authorities to bring forward projects under the private finance initiative. [3138]

Mr. Gummer: On 31 October we relaxed the capital finance rules to promote the private finance initiative in local government. We also issued guidance on those relaxations and associated arrangements for revenue support for PFI projects.

Village Shops and Post Offices

22. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce rate relief for village shops and post offices. [3139]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Local Government and Rating Bill, which was introduced on 24 October, will give 50 per cent. mandatory rate relief to certain general stores and post offices in villages of 3,000 people or less. This will halve their bills. Local authorities will be able to top the relief up to 100 per cent., if they choose.

The Bill will also give local authorities significant new discretionary powers which will enable them to reduce or waive the rates bills of any other business in the village which is important to the local community.

Local Authority Capital Investment

23. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the construction industry concerning local authority capital investment. [3140]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Some construction industry organisations have proposed in their budget submission the further release of local authority capital receipts to encourage capital investment.

Thames Gateway Initiative

24. Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress with the Thames gateway initiative. [3141]

Mr. Curry: Achieving the vision for Thames gateway is a long-term, 20 to 30-year project. Nevertheless, I am greatly encouraged by progress since publication of the Thames gateway planning framework in June 1995, both in general awareness of the area and its opportunities and in the investment which is already being made.

London Government

25. Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning regional government in Greater London. [3142]

Sir Paul Beresford: None.

Environmental Targets

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Government's policy on the setting of environmental targets. [3143]

Mr. Clappison: The Government consider that sustainable development targets can be important and are ready to set quantified targets where this would be sensible. Such targets must be underpinned by scientific analysis and an assessment of the likely costs and benefits—including those to the environment. The Government list the quantified targets that they have agreed or are considering in their "The Common Inheritance" annual reports.

Urban Land (Development)

28. Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much new development currently takes place on derelict or underused urban land; and what was the situation three years ago. [3145]

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon Friend the member for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) earlier today.

Gosport Borough Council

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will compensate Gosport borough council for the loss of standard spending assessments in 1997–98 and 1996–97 resulting from errors in the population date relating to service personnel in Gosport. [3930]

Sir Paul Beresford: The population data used in standard spending assessments are those estimated by the Registrar General, using the best information available to him at the time. Information on service personnel is provided to the Registrar General by the Defence Analytical Services Agency. I understand that, following consultations with DASA, the Registrar General's estimates took account of concerns expressed by Gosport borough council relating to service personnel, to the extent that they appeared to him to be valid. I am aware that the methods of deriving the components of the population estimates are continually being refined; consequently, it is sometimes possible to produce updated estimates which differ from those provided previously for the calculation of SSAs. In the interests of certainty in financial allocations to local authorities, it is our general policy not to take account of any such subsequent refinements to any indicators, once the data have been used in the calculation of SSAs.

Sewage Effluent (Hormones)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the conclusions of the report by Brunel university on the levels of female hormones found in sewage effluent discharged into watercourses and the sea around the United Kingdom; and what plans he has to ensure that water companies extract these hormones from discharges. [4482]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Agency commissioned this report. Further work is needed to establish whether these hormones need to be removed from sewage effluent. The water industry is investigating further how they are affected by the sewage treatment process. The Environment Agency plans further work to establish how the hormones are broken down naturally after discharge. With the Natural Environment Research Council, it is also examining whether the presence of these substances has any implications for fish populations and their fertility. Most of the rivers adjacent to the seven treatment works tested in this study support thriving fish populations.

Water Payments

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when water payments ceased to be treated as part of Government accounts in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland and (c) Northern Ireland. [4356]

Mr. Clappison: The information is as follows:

In England and Wales, the 10 water and sewerage companies ceased to be within the public sector and their external finance requirement ceased to be counted against public expenditure for Government accounting purposes from the date of their privatisation on 12 December 1989;

In Scotland, the external finance requirements of water authorities and domestic sewerage relief grants have counted against public expenditure since 1 April 1996; prior to April 1996 the capital expenditure financed by borrowing by the predecessor local authorities scored against public expenditure totals, as did central Government assistance through the revenue support grant and grants such as the rural water grant.

In Northern Ireland, the Water Service, an executive agency of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland, is the provider of public water and sewerage services and its finances are included in Government accounts.

Disabled Facility Grants

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the legislation will be implemented in respect of disabled facility grants for local authorities. [4748]

Mr. Clappison: Part I of the Housing Grants, Construction and Regeneration Act 1996, which includes the provisions on disabled facilities grants, will come into force on 17 December 1996.

Council House Sales

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many individuals have bought their council houses under the right to buy; and if he will make a statement. [3521]

Mr. Clappison: Local authorities and new towns in England reported have that between the introduction of right-to-buy legislation in October 1980 and the end of June 1996—the latest date for which information is available—the total RTB sale is 1.270 million homes.

Outer-London Boroughs

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received in respect of the London borough of Havering and other outer-London boroughs and the standard spending assessment and area cost adjustment. [3637]

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration received a delegation led by the London borough of Havering which included representatives from the London boroughs of Bexley, Bromley, Harrow, Kingston and Sutton about the area cost adjustment on 11 November.

Other written representations have recently been received on standard spending assessments, including from outer-London boroughs.

Sheffield City Council

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Sheffield city council regarding the area cost adjustment and its effect on Sheffield's standard spending assessment. [3826]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have received a number of representations on the area cost adjustment from Sheffield city council, both individually and as part of larger groups of local authorities. The city council has drawn attention to the reduction in its standard spending assessment which would follow from the recommendations of the review of the area cost adjustment. It has urged us not to implement those recommendations.

Special Advertisement Control

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what decision he has made on the proposed abolition of the regime of special advertisement control; and if he will make a statement. [4798]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: After consideration of the extensive public consultation exercise over the future of special controls, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has decided that they will remain for the time being.

The regime of special advertisement control was originally introduced in 1948 to remove the proliferation of poster panels along main roads in the countryside and to ensure continued protection against further unsuitable displays.

My Department has commissioned research into areas of special control of advertisements because little appeared to be known or properly understood about the practical consequences of ASCA designation. Contrary to the belief of many, the removal of the ASCA regime would not have created an "open season" on advertising in the countryside, because these special controls largely duplicate advertisement controls already available to local planning authorities. In particular, all new poster hoardings, except certain temporary displays screening building sites, would still have required consent from local planning authorities to be lawfully displayed. Consultation revealed that local authority associations, planning practitioners and amenity societies were not in favour of complete abolition of the regime as proposed, but wished to retain the level of protection it afforded. Having carefully considered these representations, my right hon. Friend believed it was right to continue with the ASCA regime for the time being. As for the future, we shall be looking to see if there are sensible modifications that can be made to existing systems to provide the same protection of amenity with less bureaucracy.

Copies of all the representations made in response to the Department's consultation paper have been placed in the Library of the House.

Business Rates

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 323, on local authorities' receipts from business rates on sporting rights, on what he based his estimate of the total business rates paid on sporting rights. [4974]

Mr. Gummer: The total rateable value of sporting rights in England which are severed from the occupation of land is £8.2 million. No figures are available for sporting rights which are not severed and which fall to be valued as part of the land over which they are exercised. For estimating purposes, we took the additional rateable value of such rights across England to be between £2 million and £3 million.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sports Council

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she received the annual report and accounts of the Sports Council for (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96; if she will publish them; and if she will make a statement. [3866]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Sports Council's annual accounts for the years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 were received and laid before Parliament on the following dates:

Account	Received	Laid
1993–94	19 July 1994	17 October 1994
1994–95	18 September 1995	29 November 1995
1995–96	23 July 1996	9 September 1996

The Sports Council's last annual report was published in 1993. The council hopes to publish an annual report for 1995–96 in early January 1997.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Administration Costs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will publish the administrative cost (i) per pupil, (ii) per school and (iii) per head of population incurred by central Government in each of the five years to 1995–96. [4568]

Mr. Robin Squire: The direct administrative costs incurred centrally by the Department for Education and Employment for staff involved in schools work in England in 1995–96 were:

(i) £2.46 per pupil

(ii) £750 per school

(iii) £0.41 per head of population

Comparable information for earlier years is difficult to obtain because of changes in the organisation of the Department. Provision of this information would incur disproportionate cost.

Special Needs Pupils

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment on what basis extra per capita funding is available for (a) primary and (b) secondary school pupils with special educational needs. [4500]

Mr. Robin Squire: When allocating funds to schools under local management of schools schemes, local education authorities may include factors in their formulae which allocate additional funding for non-statemented special educational needs based on proxy indicators of need such as free school meals, or direct indicators of need such as SEN audits. Such factors may be applied to both primary and secondary schools.

Home-school Contracts

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment she has made of the level of support for home-school contracts following the consultation on circular 6/96; and if she will make a statement. [4501]

Mr. Forth: The principle of home-school agreements is generally supported. Different views are taken on their use in admission arrangements. The proposals in the Education Bill would give school admission authorities the flexibility to decide for themselves.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she proposes to take to improve the participation of representatives of small businesses in committees of inquiry, advisory bodies and non-departmental public bodies for which she is responsible. [4383]

Mr. Paice: In making appointments to executive non-departmental public bodies the Department conforms with the code and guidance issued by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments. Central to the code is the overriding principle of selection based on merit. Where appropriate, ENDPB posts are advertised in the national press and/or details circulated to representational bodies. It is, of course, possible for an individual to nominate anyone for appointment to a post, including themselves. Advisory bodies are exempt from the OCPA code but are encouraged to comply with it when making appointments.

The membership of the Department's only committee of inquiry, the committee of inquiry into higher education, was finalised only after wide consultation, including employers' representative bodies.

Investors in People

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to her answer of 4 November, Official Report, columns 378—79, if she will list the members of the Investors in People UK board whose main business activity involves the running of a firm with (a) under 100 employees, (b) under 50 employees, (c) under 20 employees and (d) under 10 employees. [4440]

Mr. Paice: On the board of Investors in People UK there are two directors whose main business activity involves the running of a firm where the number of employees fall within the categories above. These are:

(a) under 100—Mr. Martin Henry, Lastolite Ltd. and

(d) under 10—Mrs. Susan Todd, Polymedia Ltd.

Bradford City Technology College

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what right of appeal exists for parents refused a place for a child at the city technology college in Bradford; and what representations she has received about the catchment area of the Bradford CTC; [4441]

(2) what guidance she has issued to the city technology college in Bradford concerning the catchment area of the college; for what reason (a) the BD15 postcode area is included and (b) the BD13 post code area is excluded; how far each is from the college; and if she will make a statement. [4442]

Mrs. Gillan: Dixons city technology college in Bradford recently sought approval from the Secretary of State for an extension to its catchment area. In the light of representations from Bradford LEA, the local diocesan boards and a number of schools in the vicinity, a limited extension was agreed for admissions for the 1997–98 academic year onwards. The extension includes the BD15 post code; coverage of the BD13 post code was not requested. Both these post code areas are some 2.5 miles from Dixons CTC at their nearest point, but BD13 extends further away from the school.

Dixons CTC offer an appeal procedure for parents refused a place for their child. The appeals procedure is explained during the admissions process and written details are automatically given to parents of every unsuccessful pupil.

Education Expenditure

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the total United Kingdom education expenditure (a) at current prices, (b) as a percentage of United Kingdom gross national product and (c) as a percentage of total public expenditure in (i) 1966–67, (ii) 1976–77, (iii) 1986–87 and (iv) 1996–97. [2710]

Mr. Robin Squire: [holding answer 5 November 1996]: Data for 1966–67 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Outturn information for 1996–97 is not currently available. Figures for 1995–96 have been substituted.

	1976–77	1986–87	1995–96
Total UK public expenditure on education at current prices	£7.8 billion	£18.7 billion	£35.9 billion (est. outturn)
As a percentage of GNP	5.9 per cent.	4.8 per cent.	5.1 per cent.
As a percentage of total public expenditure	13.0 per cent.	11.3 per cent.	11.9 per cent.
Number of pre-16 pupils in the maintained sector	10.113 million	7.923 million	7.957 million

SCOTLAND

Smallholdings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assistance his Department gives to encourage smallholdings. [3451]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: A comprehensive range of measures to support the agriculture industry in Scotland is available for all sizes of farms, including smallholdings and crofts. Details of grant schemes, sources of advice and other assistance are provided in "Scottish Agriculture: A Guide to Grants and Services", which can be obtained from local offices of the Scottish Office Agriculture, Environment and Fisheries Department. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Oil Rig Construction Sites

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of oil rig construction sites built by the Government which are currently derelict; and if he will list their current owners. [4282]

Mr. Kynoch: None.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to make special funding available to local authorities for the reinstatement of former oil rig construction sites. [4284]

Mr. Kynoch: I have no plans to make special funding available to local authorities for the reinstatement of former oil rig sites.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to regenerate derelict oil rig construction sites; and if he will make a statement. [4283]

Mr. Kynoch: I am not aware of any derelict oil rig construction sites in Scotland.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those oil rig construction sites where the Government have a duty to restore the area's former natural landscape. [4285]

Mr. Kynoch: There are none.

House Completions

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what was the total number of completions of housing association properties for rent within Scottish Homes' approved development programme in each district and island council area in each of the years 1989–90 to 1995–96; [4286]

(2) what was the total number of new starts of housing association properties for rent within Scottish Homes' approved development programme in each district and island council area in each of the years 1989–90 to 1995–96. [4287]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The available information is held by Scottish Homes. I have asked its chairman, Mr. John Ward, to write to the hon. Member.

Highlands and Islands Convention

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will be responsible for meeting the travel and accommodation expenses for those invited to attend the proposed convention of the highlands and islands; and if he will make a statement. [4845]

Mr. Kynoch: Yes.

Deportation

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons awaiting deportation are currently detained in (a) HM prison Greenock and (b) other prisons; what is the average length of detention served by such a person; and if he will make a statement. [3717]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Dr. Norman A. Godman, dated 19 November 1996:

Lord James Douglas–Hamilton has asked me to reply to your question relating to the number of persons awaiting deportation who are currently held at HM Prison, Greenock and at other prisons and the average length of detention served by such persons.

Persons detained in Scotland under the Immigration Act are normally held at Greenock, Edinburgh and Aberdeen prisons until their deportation order is served or their case is otherwise disposed of by the immigration authorities.

There are currently six such people held at Greenock and one at Aberdeen. In the past twelve months the average length of detention has been 10 weeks.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments were made in Scotland in 1995–96 under the arable area payments scheme (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000, (k) £200,001 and £250,000 and (l) £250,001 and over. [4216]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The information relating to payments made to farmers in Scotland under the 1995 arable area payments scheme is as follows:

	Number
£0–£5,000	4,990
£5,001–£10,000	708
£10,001–£15,000	856
£15,001–£20,000	626
£20,001–£25,000	512
£25,001–£50,000	1,200
£50,001—£75,000	394
£75,001–£100,000	148
£100,001–£150,000	97
£150,001–£200,000	26
£200,001–£250,000	6
£250,001 and over	4

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many payments were made in Scotland in 1995–96 for set-aside under the arable area scheme (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,0001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000 and (k) over £200,001. [4228]

Mr. Robertson [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The information relating to set-aside payments made to farmers in Scotland under the 1995 arable area payments scheme is as follows:

	Number
£0–£5,000	3,282
£5,001–£10,000	965
£10,001–£15,000	265
£15,001–£20,000	86
£20,001–£25,000	52
£25,001–£50,000	31
£50,001–£75,000	3
£75,001–£100,000	3

There were no set-aside payments in excess of £100,000.

WALES

Suicides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of suicides among under-30s, broken down by gender, in Wales for each year since 1985. [3831]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested, provided by the Office for National Statistics, is given in the table.

Suicides[1] of Welsh residents—under 30

	Males	Females
1985	63	12
1986	36	11
1987	59	12
1988	49	12
1989	42	10
1990	65	8
1991	60	18
1992	70	15
1993	64	6
1994	72	12
1995	72	13

[1] International Classification of Diseases (9th revision): E950–E959, E980–E989 (excluding E988.8).

Dyslexia

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to liaise with universities and colleges with a view to assisting those with dyslexia into further education and higher education; and if he will make a statement. [4203]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: None. Guidance to the Welsh funding councils on their responsibilities for students with learning difficulties was set out in separate letters dated 5 May 1992 and 27 May 1992, paragraphs 22–24 and 28–32 respectively. Copies of both letters have been placed in the Library of the House.

Section 4 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 specifies how the Further Education Funding Council for Wales must discharge its further education duties—sections 2 and 3 of the Act—in relation to students having learning difficulties. It required the FEFCW to have regard to the requirements of those with learning difficulties and to arrange placements for them in independent specialist institutions where appropriate; it also defines a learning difficulty for the purposes of the Act.

In practice, the FEFCW makes funds available to colleges of further education to secure provision appropriate for students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities. This provision can be discreet programmes in independent living skills or it can be to support inclusion on mainstream programmes of study. Assistance for students with dyslexia is generally of the latter kind. The FEFCW also makes available funds to colleges to diagnose dyslexia and support students by providing specialist tutorials and equipment. In addition, the FEFCW has allocated funds specifically to promote on-course support for students with functional literacy needs. One of the most successful colleges in diagnosing dyslexia among students and offering support is Deeside college, which is the only college in the UK registered to use the Irlan diagnostic methodology developed in the USA.

In addition to the above, the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 places a duty on the FEFCW to require further education colleges to publish disability statements about the provision of facilities for education made by a college in respect of people with disabilities. A copy of Welsh Office circular 48/96, setting out the FEFCW's and colleges' responsibilities in this area, is also in the Library. The governing bodies of higher education institutions are required to provide disabled students with a description of the facilities for education and research that they offer.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the number of persons who are currently employed in opencast mining activities in Wales. [4392]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Coal Authority estimates that there were 708 full-time employees in opencast mining in Wales at August 1996.

Home Energy Conservation Act 1995

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the Home Energy Conservation Act 1995 will come into force in Wales. [4486]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: On 1 April 1997.

Environment Annual Report

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources he intends to commit to ensure the implementation of the commitments to environmental improvement set out at pages 30 to 35 of his annual report on the environment in Wales. [4722]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: My right hon. Friend's expenditure plans, including those for his environment programmes, are published annually in the Welsh Office's departmental report. The environment in Wales fifth report—pages 24 and 10—included reference to the increased provision that has been made available to the Countryside Council for Wales and to the resources provided to support the work of the Sea Empress environmental evaluation committee.

Roads

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the stress points on motorways and major roads in Wales; and what assessment he has made of the implications for the investment and regeneration of the economy. [4552]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The south Wales area traffic study, published in December 1990, and the north-east Clwyd traffic study, published in November 1991, looked at traffic levels, traffic growth and future capacity requirements for the road network in those areas of Wales. There is a degree of assessment of potential economic growth associated with such studies. Copies of both reports are in the Library of the House.

Health Care Emergency Centres

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the primary care emergency centres belonging to (a) general practitioner co-operatives, (b) Healthcall and (c) other providers which are grant aided from his Department's funds. [5005]

Mr. Hague: The information requested is not held centrally. Responsibility for monitoring general practitioner out of hours arrangements rests with individual health authorities.

Public Bodies (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sanctions he can apply to public bodies dependent on his Department's approval for expenditure on capital projects which overspend on such projects by 10 per cent. or more; and what procedures he has to detect unapproved overspends of 10 per cent. or more. [5007]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office determines levels of delegated authority for capital expenditure by public bodies such as non-departmental public bodies and NHS trusts. Within these delegations the bodies themselves are responsible for managing their capital projects, including any possible overspends. For projects above the delegated limits a variety of arrangements are in place in the Department to ensure effective monitoring and control of expenditure. These are tailor-made to meet the particular circumstances of the capital expenditure programme concerned. Expenditure on major capital projects is monitored and reported quarterly to senior management of the Department, and to the Treasury. Information about major capital projects is included in the Welsh Office departmental report, Cm 3215.

South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 1 November, Official Report, column 295, on what date he was notified by the South and East Wales Ambulance NHS Trust of the overspend above the estimated £2.4 million cost of relocating its headquarters; and on what date he was informed of the trust's internal costing of the project at £3.1 million. [5009]

Mr. Hague: My officials were notified on 29 January 1996 of a possible overspend of £556,000 and on 28 August 1996 that the trust's internal costings for the scheme had been £3.1 million.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to paragraph 32 of the district auditor's summary reports entitled "Review of Centralisation, including Command and Control, South—East Wales Ambulance Trust", if he has approved the £1.2 million overspend on the relocation project; and if he has received from the trust the details of the increase in costs and the explanations recommended by the district auditor. [5008]

Mr. Hague: No. The detailed explanation for the increase in the costs of the scheme has not yet been received.

Health Service Expenditure

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the (a) net expenditure and (b) gross expenditure on the national health service in Wales in each year since 1974–75. [5033]

Mr. Hague: Information for the years 1974–75 to 1994–95 is published in "Health and Personal Social Services Statistics for Wales", table 2.01 of the finance chapter. Provisional figures for 1995–96 can be found in the appropriation accounts for 1995–96. Copies are in the Library of the House.

Secondees and Consultants

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 210, concerning departmental staffing, in which divisions each of the (a) secondees and (b) consultants is working; and how many of the secondees are (i) full—time equivalent and (ii) part—time equivalent. [5035]

Mr. Hague: Two secondees work in the finance group; nine work in the Health Department and two are in the health professional group. Only one of the 13 is part—time.

The consultants are working on projects for various divisions throughout the Welsh Office.

Eurofreight Terminal Grant

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Welsh Development Agency concerning grant in aid and agency funding for a Eurofreight terminal at (a) Wentlooge Levels and (b) Pengan Moors. [5006]

Mr. Hague: My officials have corresponded with the agency about possible funding for a Eurofreight terminal in south Wales. The agency is aware it will need my approval before incurring expenditure on a scheme for a European freight terminal.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish that part of the service level agreement between his Department and the Welsh Health Common Services Authority concerned with the supervision of the Welsh community health councils; and what proposals he has to ensure that community health councils have the freedom to criticise under the proposals for the new service level agreement. [5032]

Mr. Hague: Community health councils will shortly be consulted on a revised service level agreement. I will place a copy of the agreed document in the Library of the House when that consultation has been concluded.

Patients Charter

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the cost of the exercise initiated by the letter of 31 May 1995 from his Department to chief executives of health authorities and NHS trusts concerning the patients charter; how many news stories it generated; and to what extent doctors and nurses participated in his Department's press conference. [5034]

Mr. Hague: The cost to each health authority and NHS trust of publicising its achievements is an issue for each chief executive.

Information on the level of NHS generated news stories is not held centrally.

Members of the NHS were not invited to participate in the Welsh Office launch of the 1995 NHS performance tables.

Public Appointments

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those bodies in Wales to which he appoints one or more members and give the total cost of remuneration to those members (a) in salary or allowances and (b) expenses in the last year for which figures are available. [4797]

Mr. Hague: The information available centrally about the appointments I make, including remuneration, is contained in "Appointments by the Secretary of State for Wales, 1 September 1996", copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Information on expenses is not collected centrally.

TREASURY

EDS Ltd.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contracts his Department, agencies and associated bodies have had with EDS for each year since 1985; what was the value of each contract; if he will indicate for each contract (a) if it was completed, (b) what modifications were made at the request of (i) the company and (ii) the Department and (c) if work under contract is being undertaken in-house; and if he will make a statement on the number of job reductions in his Department arising from the contracting out of work by EDS. [3799]

Mr. Jack: Since 1985, the Chancellor of the Exchequer's departments have had one contract with EDS—the Inland Revenue's 10–year contract for the provision of IT services, which started on 1 July 1994 and which was valued at £1.03 billion.

The contract has been modified a number of times to make minor procedural changes by mutual agreement to benefit both parties. Significant changes have been made in only three main areas: the completion of the master service level agreement, to define the quality and quantity of service, as required by the terms of the contract; an extension to the contract to include staff who provided support to the Inland Revenues's statistics and economics office; extension of the licensing for Oracle software and to provide for 24-hour remote support;

It is not always possible to attribute each change to either the Inland Revenue or EDS, although the change for the transfer of additional staff was at the Inland Revenue's request.

No work under contract with EDS is undertaken in-house, although the Inland Revenue has a small team of IT technical specialists to validate EDS proposals.

Inland Revenue staff reductions arising from the EDS contract were 2,074. They were transferred to EDS in two tranches on 1 July 1994 and 1 January 1996.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the names of those hon. Members who have made representations to him in support of (a) Oracle and (b) EDS Ltd. involvement in the computerised environment for self-assessment. [1633]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no such representations.

Married Person's Tax Allowance

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the total cost in lost revenue of introducing a married person's tax allowance based on (a) £500 per married person, (b) £750 per married person and (c) £1,000 per married person. [3901]

Mr. Jack: The cost would depend on whether the proposed allowance replaced or was in addition to the existing married couple's allowance and whether it was available at marginal rates or at a fixed rate.

Parent Tax Allowance

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the impact on revenue of introducing a tax allowance for a nominated parent of (a) £200 per child, (b) £500 for a second and subsequent children and (c) £200 for a first and second child and £500 for successive children. [3903]

Mr. Jack: Estimated full-year costs at 1996–97 income levels are given in the table. The assumption has been made that the nominated parent is the husband, allowances are given at marginal tax rates and any unused allowances cannot be transferred to the wife. Lone parents are also assumed to be entitled to these allowances.

	Level of child tax allowance (£)
	First child	Second child	Third/fourth child	Cost in a full year[1] £ million
(a)	200	200	200	450
(b)	200	500	500	750
(c)	200	200	500	530

[1] Based on a projection of the 1994–95 Survey of Personal Incomes.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proposals he has for checking the rise in the pound; [4752]

(2) if he will list the performance of the pound sterling against the other currencies of the European monetary system in terms of the 2 per cent. and the 6 per cent. bands for every quarter since the last quarter of 1992. [4765]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The Government recognise the value of a stable exchange rate but do not have a target for sterling. The exchange rate is only one of many factors that has to be taken account of in policy decisions.

Data on sterling exchange rates against other EU currencies can be found in "Main Economic Indicators", which is published monthly by the OECD.

Income Tax Cuts

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the reduction in tax paid per year in cash terms, and as a percentage of the total gross annual income, for each income decile group, resulting from a 1p reduction in the standard rate of income tax. [4467]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Information on the effect of a 1p reduction in the basic rate of income tax at 1996–97 income levels is given in the table.

Group of taxpayers per cent.	Reduction in income tax £ million	Reduction as a percentage total income per cent.
Top 10	520	0.4
11–20	380	0.6
21–30	270	0.5

Outstanding Tax

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much is owed to the Inland Revenue in uncollected (a) income tax, (b) corporation tax, (c) inheritance tax, (d) capital gains tax and (e) VAT. [4470]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce) on 13 November at column 228 in respect of figures for uncollected income tax, corporation tax and VAT.

The figures for inheritance tax and capital gains tax are given in the table. In this question, "uncollected" has been taken to mean "uncollected and subsequently written off or remitted".

Inland Revenue collection accounts are drawn up each year to the end of October, and the table therefore shows the amounts as at the end of October 1995—the latest date for which figures are available. The information can also be found in the board of Inland Revenue's annual report.

Type of tax	Amount remitted/written off (rounded to nearest £ million) October 1995
Inheritance tax	2
Capital gains tax	34

With the exception of small amounts remitted or written off in respect of Development Land Tax and miscellaneous other duties, and subject to rounding, these two items represent the amounts included under 'other taxes' in the previous answer.

Inland Revenue Computers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what physical protection and contractual safeguards he has arranged to prevent breach of taxpayers' confidentiality by software suppliers allowed emergency access from terminals in America and Australia to the Inland Revenue's computer system. [1978]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 4 November 1996]: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 13 November at columns 226–27.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what alternatives to overseas support for the protection of Inland Revenue data against operational risk of a shutdown or slowdown of the self-assessment system were examined by Ministers before revision of the Oracle contract. [1635]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: I considered all alternative technical support arrangements, but none provided the degree of protection that is required.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if Inland Revenue data can be accessed by Oracle facilities overseas before legal or other contractual safeguards concerning the security or holding of that data have been contractually agreed between Oracle and persons representing the Inland Revenue. [1637]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what date the computerised environment for self-assessment systems will be fully operational and in what way policy has recently changed with regards to security aspects of the holding of Inland Revenue self-assessment data. [1638]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: The new self-assessment computer system is being brought in in stages, as required, over a period of some 18 months. As regards the security aspects, I refer to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) on 13 November at columns 226–27.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons it is not possible to require under the contract between Oracle and the Inland Revenue adequate back-up facilities for fault correction in the computerised environment for self-assessment. [1639]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 11 November 1996]: Oracle is supplying, under contract to Electronic Data Services Ltd., the Inland Revenue's information technology partner, full back-up support for the self-assessment computer system.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the security of information systems of the EDS-Oracle contract with the Inland Revenue. [1642]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: I refer to the reply I gave on 13 November to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) at columns 226–27.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assurances he has received from (a) EDS and (b) Oracle as to the security of information held on the Inland Revenue database when transmitted outside of the United Kingdom. [1643]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: I refer to the reply I gave on 13 November to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms Primarolo) at columns 226–27.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if subcontractors and contractors otherwise associated with EDS or Oracle will be subject to the same contractual terms as EDS or Oracle themselves in the protection and security of the Inland Revenue database. [1645]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: Yes.

DEFENCE

Gaul Trawler

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy personnel were present on the trawler, Gaul, during the six months before her disappearance off north cape; and if he will make a statement. [4364]

Mr. Soames: My Department has no record of Royal Navy personnel ever having been aboard the trawler Gaul.

There has for some time been speculation about the loss of the Gaul in February 1974 and allegations that she was involved in intelligence-gathering activities. My Department has no record of the Gaul, under that name or her earlier name, Ranger Castor, ever having been engaged on any task for the Royal Navy, or any evidence to call into doubt the findings of the independent investigation which concluded that she foundered and sank with all hands in heavy seas.

Unfilled Posts

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many billeted posts were unfilled on operational ships of the Royal Navy on the latest date for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [3522]

Mr. Soames: This matter is the responsibility of the chief executive of the Naval Manning Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from F. M. Malbon to Mr. Robert Key, dated 19 November 1996:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the number of unfilled billets on operational ships of the Royal Navy, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency.

Currently, 28 RN officer and 560 RN rating billets in operational ships, submarines, front line squadrons and ships' flights are unfilled, representing, respectively, 1.7% and 4.6% of the total of such billets.

The deployment of sufficient suitably skilled and experienced manpower to individual billets and management of a progressive reduction in manpower gapping are prime objectives of the Naval Manning Agency. The Agency's Corporate Plan, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library, states that the NMA will seek to fill more than 93% of total officer billets and 93.5% of total rating/other rank billets in 1996/1997. Priority is given to those ships, submarines, squadrons and units engaged in high priority operations.

I hope this is helpful.

Continued Service Incentives

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list by rank and by specialism, the number of posts in the Royal Navy, the Army and the Royal Air Force, where employment attracts financial incentives to continue in service beyond the contracted dates, including the value of such bounty; and if he will make a statement. [3523]

Mr. Soames: A number of bonuses have been recently introduced to aid retention of personnel in key areas. These bonuses are paid in return either for waiving the right to give notice for a further period, staying until a pensionable point or completing a commission, or for re-engagement, thereby saving recruitment and training costs. Details of values of these bonuses and numbers are given in the tables, although some will vary from year to year where the bonus is on-going, depending on numbers eligible:

Royal Navy marine engineering mechanics (MEMs)

One-off bonus of either £1,500 or £3,000 to waive the right to give notice to leave the Royal Navy for six or 18 months respectively, to general service and submarine MEMs who have between three and nine years service on 15 September 1996.

Total targeted: 1,276

Predicted take-up: 893

Royal Navy Sea Harrier Pilots (Lieutenant/Lt. Commander) (£10,000 to Sea Harrier pilots who complete a medium career commission, or serve to qualify for a pension on an extended medium career commission or full career commission).

Total targeted 1996–97: 4

Predicted take-up 1996–97: 3

Predicted take-up per annum thereafter: 4

Army re-engagement bounty (Private)

£1,400 to soldiers in Household Cavalry, Royal Armoured Corps, Royal Artillery and Infantry who waive their right to give notice for 12 months.

Total targeted: 2,960

Total accepted, as at 30 June 1996: 2,693

Royal marine re-engagement bounty (all ranks below substantive Corporal)

One-off bounty of £2,000 to Marines in seven shortage categories who had already given notice or were in a position to do so, to waive their right to give notice to leave the Royal Marines for six months.

Total targeted: 1,123

Total accepted: 820

In addition, there is a tri-service committal bonus of £2,000 payable to all ratings/other ranks/airmen/airwomen on completion of 4½ and 7½ years' in the Army, provided that the individual has not given notice to leave at these points.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will publish the Animal Welfare Advisory Committee's report on its first visit to the protection and life sciences division, Porton Down. [3966]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Animal Welfare Advisory Committee, which was set up in July this year, has now visited all the establishments in the Department which conduct experiments involving animals. The committee intends to submit a report to my Department's chief scientific adviser next month and I would expect publication early in the new year.

State Opening of Parliament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of military personnel who took part in the state opening of Parliament. [4670]

Mr. Soames: Military personnel are paid on a daily basis irrespective of their duties and their involvement in the state opening of Parliament is not separately costed.

Advanced Strike Technology

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made since the signature last December of the joint advanced strike technology memorandum of understanding with the United States. [5104]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The United States Department of Defence announced on 16 November the selection of two main contractors, Boeing Defense and Aerospace Group and Lockheed Martin, to carry out the concept demonstration phase of the proposed joint strike fighter aircraft programme. The concept demonstration will be carried out against a requirement to whose formulation the UK has contributed. The United kingdom has now arranged to participate in the phase with a view to the possible purchase of the short take-off, vertical landing version of the aircraft as a successor to the Royal Navy's Sea Harrier in the second decade of the next century. The concept demonstration is expected to cost $2.2 billion and will include the construction, by each of the two contractors, of flying demonstration aircraft. The United Kingdom will contribute $200 million to the phase and we expect a significant share of the work to be carried out by British industry.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health Services (Newry and Mourne)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total expenditure on (a) hospital services and (b) social services in each year since 1990 in the Newry and Mourne district; and what is the projected expenditure for each year to 2000. [3962]

Mr. Moss: The information is not available in the exact form requested. The table discloses the total expenditure in the Newry and Mourne district on hospital specialties and personal social services for the years 1992–93 to 1994–95. An analysis of expenditure for 1995–96 is not yet available. However, total expenditure for the year is £40,488,000.

This information has been extracted from supplementary statements produced to provide further analysis of the expenditure disclosed in the annual accounts. The format of these statements was revised in 1992–93. Prior to this, the information requested is not available.

The projected expenditure on hospital services and social services for each year 1996–97 to 1999–2000 is not available.

Newry and Mourne District

Year	Hospital Specialties	Personal Social Services
1992–93	19,157,679	8,773,605
1993–94	20,114,722	11,651,572
1994–95	20,160,969	13,772,833

The information has been extracted from the analysis of expenditure reported in the FR22 of the Newry and Mourne directly managed unit for each year 1992–93 to 1993–94. For 1994–95 the information has been extracted from the FR22 returns of the Newry and Mourne HSS trust.

Public Order

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been prosecuted under (a) article 7 and (b) article 20 of the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order in each year since its enactment. [1071]

Sir John Wheeler: The number of persons proceeded against under articles 7 and 20 of the Public Order (Northern Ireland) Order 1987, by year is as follows:

From 27 April 1987: five with obstruction—under article 20(1)

1988: 21 with obstruction—under article 20 (1)

1990: one with obstruction—under article 20(1)

1991: one with endeavouring to break up a lawful procession, under article 7(1)

1995: two with obstruction, under article 20 (1)

Up to 31 July 1996: 16 with obstruction, under article 20(1)

Terrorist Bombs (Compensation)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy with respect to seeking compensation from the Irish Republic for damage caused by terrorist bombs manufactured in that state and exploded in the United Kingdom. [2455]

Sir John Wheeler: None.

Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proposals he has for co–operation between relevant Northern Ireland Office departments in respect of providing accommodation for students. [3586]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Benefits Expenditure

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list public expenditure on benefits for each of the last 10 years (a) in real terms and (b) as a proportion of total spending for Northern Ireland. [3863]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is given in the table:

Year	Benefit spend[1] £ million	Benefit spend as percentage of total spend
1985–86	2,001.3	29.24
1986–87	2,108.1	30.17
1987–88	2,103.6	29.51
1988–89	2,058.8	27.28
1989–90	2,044.5	27.59
1990–91	2,076.4	28.95
1991–92	2,229.6	30.25
1992–93	2,425.1	31.33
1993–94	2,632.6	32.49
1994–95	2,773.3	33.30
1995–96[2]	2,896.8	33.78

[1] Figures are at 1996–97 prices.
[2] Estimated figures.

Disabled Access

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the percentage of commercial premises in Northern Ireland which have disabled access. [3837]

Mr. Moss: None.

Small Firms

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of firms in Northern Ireland have fewer than 20 employees. [3838]

Mr. Ancram: There are 18,178 non-agricultural enterprises in the private sector in Northern Ireland which have fewer than 20 employees. This accounts for 87.7 per cent. of the total number of enterprises registered for VAT or PAYE.

Low Pay

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) women and (b) men in Northern Ireland earn less than £1.50 per hour. [3847]

Mr. Ancram: The two main sources of earnings information for Northern Ireland are the new earnings survey—NES—and the labour force survey—LFS. Both of these record an insufficient number in the sample earning less than £1.50 per hour to provide a reliable estimate.

Housing Benefit

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were on housing benefit in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years; and at what cost to public funds. [3849]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Housing benefit case load (000s)	Cost (£ million)
1985–86	180.0	108.7
1986–87	186.9	118.0
1987–88	202.4	125.4
1988–89	160.7	126.9
1989–90	164.2	143.5
1990–91	164.2	159.2
1991–92	166.5	170.3
1992–93	166.5	192.1
1993–94	178.5	222.4
1994–95	180.7	251.8
1995–96	182.4	278.6

Homelessness

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homeless people there are in Northern Ireland; and how many of these are under 18 years of age. [3855]

Mr. Moss: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. The chief executive has advised me that it is not possible to give the number of people who are homeless at a particular time. However, information available is as follows:

Year	Total[1]	Under 18
1995–96	4,319	195
1996–97[2]	2,421	109

[1] Accepted as in priority need and awarded priority status.

[2] From April 1996 to September 1996.

The total number presenting as homeless for 1995–96 was 10,468 and from April to September 1996 was 5,678.

Child Support Agency

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases are currently being administered by the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland. [3857]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Child Support Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Patrick Devlin. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from P. Devlin to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 13 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your question about the number of cases being administered by the Child Support Agency in Northern Ireland.

In August 1996, the number of cases being administered by the Northern Ireland Child Support agency was 23,042. This is the most recent data available and is a count of all those cases maintained clerically or on the Child Support Computer System which are not classified as being closed.

I hope you find this information useful.

Pension Schemes

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of people in Northern Ireland have been members of (a) private pension schemes and (b) occupational pension schemes in each of the last 10 years. [3859]

Mr. Moss: The total number of people in private pension schemes and occupational pension schemes in Northern Ireland is not available. However, information on the number of people with an appropriate personal pension—APP—used to contract out of the state scheme, and the number of people paying contracted-out contributions, is available. Data on private pensions or occupational pensions which are not contracted-out are not held by the Department of Social Security.

The information is given in the table:

Year	APP (thousands)	Percentage of workforce	Percentage of population
1984–85	—	—	—
1985–86	—	—	—
1986–87	—	—	—

Low-income Households

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the percentage of households in Northern Ireland which have net incomes after housing costs of less than half the national average; and how many (a) people and (b) children are involved. [3861]

Mr. Moss: The percentage of households in Northern Ireland with net income—disposable income—after housing costs below half the United Kingdom average is 31.4.

(a) The percentage of persons in Northern Ireland households with net income after housing costs below half the United Kingdom average is 20.8.

(b) The percentage of children in Northern Ireland households with net income after housing costs below half the United Kingdom average is 18.

Disabled People (Employment)

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what percentage of people in Northern Ireland who are registered disabled are (a) currently unemployed and (b) long-term unemployed; [3839]

(2) how many people are registered disabled in Northern Ireland. [3846]

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 15 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, to reply to your questions about Registered Disabled People (RDP) in Northern Ireland.

The total number of Registered Disabled People at 30 September 1996 was 9,340. Of these, 2,080 are actively seeking employment with help from the Training & Employment Agency's Disablement Advisory Service. The balance of 7,260 RDP are either in employment or are not currently seeking employment for reasons which include illness or a deterioration in their condition which precludes them, at least in the short-term, from the labour market.

Of the active jobseekers 1,400 are long-term unemployed, ie they have been unemployed for 12 months or more.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Family Credit

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in work in Northern Ireland received the family credit allowance; at what cost to public funds; and what proportion of total social security spending this constituted for each of the last 10 years. [3840]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Family credit recipients[1]	Cost £ million	Proportion of total social security spending Per cent.
1985–86	15,006	11.8	0.96
1986–87	14,744	13.7	1.03
1987–88	14,825	13.9	0.99
1988–89	14,839	28.0	1.91
1989–90	14,908	29.1	1.87
1990–91	14,500	31.5	1.84

1992–93	15,819	47.8	2.16
1993—94	18,555	56.5	2.29
1994–95	22,052	62.1	2.34
1995–96	23,668	71.0	2.51

[1] Figures taken at April of each year.

Means-tested Benefits

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the percentage of the population of Northern Ireland on means-tested benefit in each of the last 10 years. [3862]

Mr. Moss: The means-tested benefits are as follows:

income support

family credit

housing benefit

These benefits are paid to benefit units. A benefit unit is a single person or a couple, with or without children. As these statistics are for benefit units, it is not appropriate to use the population of Northern Ireland as the denominator. The number in receipt of the benefits is as follows:

Year	Income support[1]	Family credit[2]	Housing benefit[3]
1987	190,780	14,825	202,400
1988	183,715	14,839	160,000

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of pensioners in Northern Ireland rely solely on means-tested benefits. [3860]

Mr. Moss: This information is not available in the form requested.

Uninhabited Housing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) publicly owned houses and (b) privately owned houses in Northern Ireland he estimates are currently uninhabited. [3848]

Mr. Moss: The latest figures available are at 31 December 1995 and are as follows:

Public sector: 5,123

Private sector: 27,921

Total: 33,044

Construction Industry

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of people employed in the construction industry in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [3852]

Mr. Moss: Northern Ireland employees in employment in the construction industry at June of each year are as follows:

Year	Employees in employment
1986	26,370
1987	27,600
1988	28,180
1989	27,910
1990	28,760
1991	27,120
1992	26,000

Private Tenants

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of those receiving housing benefit in Northern Ireland are tenants of private landlords. [3850]

Mr. Moss: The latest figures available are for March 1996, when 17.5 per cent. of people in Northern Ireland receiving housing benefit were tenants of private landlords.

Public Housing

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many publicly owned houses have been built in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [3851]

Mr. Moss: The information is provided in the table.

New build completions by Northern Ireland Housing Executive 1986 to 1995

Negative Equity

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many homes in Northern Ireland are affected by negative equity. [3856]

Mr. Moss: I am advised by the lending institutions that there is no reported negative equity in Northern Ireland.

Benefit Fraud

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of cases of benefit fraud discovered in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years, indicating the estimated cost of these cases. [3858]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie, and I have asked him to arrange for a response to be given.

Letter from Jim Fleming to Ms Marjorie Mowlam, dated 14 November 1996:

As Mr. Wylie, Chief Executive of the Social Security Agency is absent at present, I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question on benefit fraud.

You have asked for the number of cases of benefit fraud that have been discovered in the last ten years and also an indication of the estimated costs of these cases.

The potential cost to the Exchequer if these cases had not been detected is referred to as estimated benefit savings and details are set out on the attached table for the past nine financial years. Information is not available for 1986/87.

No records have been maintained on the cost of investigating each case.

I hope this explains the position for you but I would be happy to provide any further information you require.

Prisoners (Compassionate Temporary Release Scheme)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to announce the outcome of the review of the compassionate temporary release scheme for prisoners; and if he will make a statement. [3827]

Sir John Wheeler: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Prison Service under its chief executive, Mr. Alan Shannon. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alan Shannon to Mr. Alfred Morris, dated 19 November 1996:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to the Parliamentary Question that you asked about the review of the Compassionate Temporary Release Scheme.

The Prison Service has now completed its review of policy in relation to unescorted temporary release. We have concluded that Liam Hefferman's failure to return from leave was an individual action which does not in itself have implications for the behaviour of other prisoners who might apply for temporary release. We will therefore continue to operate a policy under which prisoners may be granted unescorted leave. However, we will continue to consider applications very carefully and they will be refused if it is felt that there is a significant risk of absconding or danger to the prisoner or the public. As an additional safeguard, we have put in place new arrangements that will ensure that certain sensitive cases, including the cases of prisoners applying for leave outside Northern Ireland, will be scrutinised by a more senior official in Prison Service Headquarters.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sawn Wood Imports

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of sawn wood were imported into the United Kingdom in the past year from the 10 countries which are the principal exporters of sawn wood to the United Kingdom. [4485]

Mr. Lang: UK imports of sawn wood[1] in 1995 are given in the table:

	Thousand metric tonnes
Sweden	841
Canada	360
Finland	343
Latvia	343
Russia	263
Portugal	155
USA	89
Irish Republic	73
Estonia	61
Brazil	56
World	3,040

[1] Sawn wood is defined by headings 248.2 and 248.4 of the Standard International Trade Classification, revision 3.

EU Working Time Directive

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the representations received on the working time directive. [4279]

Mr. Lang: My Department has received a wide range of representations about the working time directive. Many of these have been from employers or employer organisations concerned about the directive's potential implications for industry.

Royal Observatories

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been spent to date on preparing for the bidding process for the royal observatories; and from which budget these sums were paid. [4569]

Mr. Ian Taylor: A total of £495,000 has been spent to 31 October 1996 on implementing the recommendations of the prior options review of the royal observatories. This has been paid from the Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council's allocation from the science budget.

Nanotechnology

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the report of the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology on the level of Government support for nanotechnology; and if he will make a statement. [4566]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have carefully considered this report which recognises the long-term public support for nanotechnology provided by both the research councils and by my Department. At least two new projects relevant to nanotechnology have recently been introduced through the foresight programme, including a national centre for microelectronics. Developments in nanotechnology have potential applications in many other generic priorities identified by foresight.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4532]

Mr. Page: My Department has taken significant steps to improve its own environmental performance. It reduced energy costs by 14.13 per cent. in the five years to March 1996 and is preparing new targets for reducing both energy usage and waste. In keeping with the commitment in the 1990 White Paper "This Common Inheritance", the Department undertook a review of its own environment management capabilities. Work has started on implementing potential improvements identified. Advice has been given to line management to ensure that the environment has been taken into account in policy formulation. Two examples of this in practice will feature in "Case studies of environmental appraisal of policies in Government Departments", scheduled to be published in the new year.

My Department has encouraged UK business to adopt positive environment management, which includes the audit of environmental performance, as a way to deal with the environment as a strategic business issue. To this end, the Department commissioned the United Kingdom Accreditation Service to create an accreditation system to allow accredited certificates to be issued against BS 7750, and latterly, ISO 14001.

Small Businesses

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take in order to improve the participation of representatives of small business in committees of inquiry, advisory bodies and non-departmental public bodies for which he is responsible. [4384]

Mr. Page: In making appointments to executive non-departmental public bodies, my Department complies with the guidance issued by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments Central to this guidance is the overriding principle of selection based on merit.

Appointments to advisory and other bodies are not formally required to comply with the OCPA guidance; however, the Department takes the commissioner's guidance into account in all its appointments, including the principle of appointment on merit.

Where appropriate, we aim to ensure that representation on public bodies is well balanced. It is of course possible for anyone to put forward nominations for public appointments, including themselves.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of defaults since the beginning of the small firms loan guarantee scheme by the size of loan. [4386]

Mr. Page: Information is not available on loans prior to April 1988. Since that date, of the 35,574 loans guaranteed the following number have defaulted:

Loans up to £30,000: 7,159

Loans above £30,00 and up to £100,000: 2,632

Loans above £100,000: 140

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many specialist lenders in the technology sector have been added to the loan guarantee scheme's list of approved lenders since his Department's review earlier this year. [4385]

Mr. Page: None. The criteria for potential lenders is currently being formulated.

Medical Research

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much was spent on research into (a) Alzheimer's disease, (b) cancer, (c) stroke, (d) heart disease and (e) HIV-AIDS in each financial year since 1989 in constant prices; and if he will make a statement. [1398]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 6 November 1996]: All the data provided are in 1995–96 prices.

Data on Government funding of HIV-AIDS research are collected centrally by the Department of Health. Funding from 1989–90 is summarised in the table:

£ million

	HIV-AIDS
1995–96	n/a
1994–95	23.2
1993–94	22.7
1992–93	21.5
1991–92	22.8
1990–91	21.9
1989–90	17.3

Research funding from the Medical Research Council for the other areas between 1989–90 and 1995–96 is summarised in table:

£ million

	Alzheimer's disease[1]	Cancer	Stroke	Heart disease
1995–96 (where available)[2]	1.97	n/a	n/a	n/a

1990–91	108,215	7,402,607	309,185
1989–90	0	7,694,481	333,873

[1] Estimated figures.
[2] NHS figures are not available.

The Northern Ireland Office does not hold the information in the form requested and it could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

When inspecting these data on the funding of research, it is important to bear in mind the way different research areas support each other—many diseases and conditions are multi-factorial. For example, if we consider the Medical Research Council's portfolio, cancer studies are underpinned by a significant amount of basic research in other areas—for example, the genetic blueprint and health, some £37 million; molecules and cells, £65 million, infections and immunity, £60 million; and some of the more basic research into HIV-AIDS has added enormously to our understanding of viral disease in general.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to implement fully the decision of the European Court of Justice on the working time directive. [4293]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 15 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made to the House on Tuesday 12 November 1996, Official Report, column 155.

Defence-related Trade

Ms Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 has been used by the Government in each of the past four years; and for what purposes. [3715]

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Since November 1992, 16 orders have been made under the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1939 as amended by the Import, Export and Customs Powers (Defence) Act 1990. The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1992, S.I. No. 3092, replaced the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1991 as amended. The 1992 order was subsequently amended by the following statutory instruments: 1992 No. 3305, 1993 No. 1020, 1993 No. 1692, 1993 No. 1825, 1993 No. 2515, 1993 No. 3264 and 1994 No. 534. The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, S.I. No. 1191, revoked all of the 1992 order, as amended, save that part applying to the exportation of antiques. The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 has been amended by the following statutory instruments: 1994 No. 1632, 1994 No. 2518, 1994 No. 2711, 1995 No. 3060, 1995 No. 3249, 1996 No. 1341 and 1996 No. 2663. The purpose of each of the orders listed is given in the explanatory notes accompanying each statutory instrument.

Research Centres

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what investigations, as part of the prior options review, are being undertaken of the ownership of (a) the Horticulture Research Centre, (b) the Macaulay Land Use Research Institute, (c) the Scottish Crop Research Institute, (d) the Institute of Arable Crops Research, (e) the Institute of Grassland and Environmental Research, (f) the John Innes Centre and (g) the Silsoe Research Institute; and if he will name the owners of the land and buildings occupied by these institutes. [4740]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The prior options review process, as set out in the guidelines placed in the Library on 26 January, Official Report, column 422, looks at a wide range of options for institutes, including change of ownership. This might take the form of, for example, transferring ownership to a university or other independent organisation, or privatisation as a company limited by guarantee.

As for current ownership of the land and buildings of the institutes in question, I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave on 18 July, Official Report, column 616, for details of the last four. Horticulture Research International operates from six sites, four of which are owned by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, one by the East Malling Trust for Horticultural Research, and one by Wye college, university of London. The details of the two institutes in Scotland are:

Location (unit, farm etc.)	Owner of land and buildings
The Macaulay Land Use Research Institute
Cragiebuckler	MLURI
Hill of Mackalea, Glenlivet	Crown Estate Commissioners
Glensaugh	Secretary of State for Scotland

Major General Prabowo

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to meet Major General Prabowo during his forthcoming visit to Britain. [4699]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 18 November 1996]: I have no plans to meet Major General Prabowo during his private visit to the UK. The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, my right hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley), did, however, meet him on 12 November to thank him on behalf of the British Government for securing the safe release in May of the British hostages in Irian Jaya.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in which years since 1979 national insurance contribution rates were changed; and what was (a) the total effect on revenue on each change and (b) the cumulative effect on total contribution income from all the changes over the period from 1979 to 1995–96. [3046]

Mr. Heald: Information in respect of employee and employer class 1 national insurance contributions and self-employed class 4 profits-related national insurance contributions is in the tables. If the contribution structure, rates and level of contracted-out rebates in force in 1979–80 had applied in 1995–96, employees would have paid about £5.3 billion less and employers would have paid about £5.6 billion more in national insurance contributions and surcharge for that year. If the class 4 contribution rate in force in 1979–80 had applied in 1995–96, the self-employed would have paid about £0.3 billion less in national insurance contributions for that year.

The self-employed class 2 flat-rate national insurance contribution has generally increased in line with the increase in prices. Apart from a £1.25 a week reduction made in October 1985, the class 2 rate rose gradually from £2.10 in 1979–80 to £5.75 in 1995–96. Thus, the financial effect has been relatively small. The financial effect for the voluntary class 3 national insurance contribution, which is set at 10p less than the class 2 contribution, is similarly small.

Class 1A national insurance contributions for company cars and car fuel were introduced at a rate of 10.4 per cent. in 1991–92 and raised £470 million in the first year of collection. The reduction in the rate of 0.2 per cent. from April 1994 reduced revenue by some £9 million.

4.5 per cent.—1979–80 to 1982–83; 4.1 per cent.—1983–84 to 1987–88; 3.8 per cent.—1988–89 to 1992–93; 3.0 per cent.—1993–94 to 1995–96.

[2] National insurance surcharge.

[3] Figures show the cash change in revenue for the tax year in which the change in contribution rate was made. The rate of national insurance surcharge was 3.5 per cent. between 1979–80 and 1981–82. In 1981–82 the surcharge raised about £3.65 billion. Thereafter, the rate of surcharge was gradually reduced until its abolition in October 1984. The financial effect of the surcharge is not included in the table.

[4] Estimates taken from Government Actuary reports on the various Contributions Re-Rating Orders and Social Security (Contributions) Bills which introduced the changes in contribution rates.

[5] The upper earnings limit for employers' contributions was abolished and reduced rates for employers of the lower paid were introduced from October 1985. Estimate taken from the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1985–86 and relates to part year only.

Elderly People (Income Support)

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the elderly population in each of the member countries of the European Union receives (i) all and (ii) part of their income from means-tested social assistance and income support schemes. [3048]

Mr. Heald: Such information as is available is contained in table 2.8 at page 42 of "Social Assistance in OECD Countries: Synthesis Report"—York university, 1996, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Benefits Agency (Seaham and Peterlee)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff were employed in the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency offices in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) at the latest available date. [3387]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. John Cummings, dated 18 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many staff were employed in the Seaham and Peterlee Benefits Agency offices in (a) 1993, (b) 1994, (c) 1995 and (d) at the latest available date.

The information requested is shown in the table below and is based on the position at the dates shown.

	Peterlee	Seaham
1 April 1993	111.0	47.0
1 April 1994	111.4	45.0
1 April 1995	104.5	44
1 April 1996	92.0	37.0
1 November 1996	92.0	37.0

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many claimants entitled to invalid care allowance currently receive payment of the invalid care allowance (a) in Lancashire and (b) in the United Kingdom; [3793]

(2) how many claimants entitled to invalid care allowance have an underlying entitlement and receive no payment of invalid care allowance (a) in Lancashire and (b) in the United Kingdom; [3794]

(3) how many claimants of invalid care allowance are currently entitled to invalid care allowance (a) in Lancashire and (b) in the United Kingdom. [3792]

Mr. Burt: As of 11 November 1996, 353,580 people in Great Britain were entitled to payment of invalid care allowance. It is estimated that less than 0.1 per cent. of these have had payment of their benefit suspended while changes of circumstances, which may affect entitlement, are investigated. Figures for Lancashire are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Information on underlying entitlement for claimants in Great Britain and in Lancashire is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Responsibility for social security matters in Northern Ireland with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Child Support Agency

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security from which bodies the Child Support Agency is seeking the address of Mr. X, whose name has been sent him. [4205]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The sources the agency can use in seeking to establish the addresses of clients are governed by child support legislation. Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive, will write separately to the hon. Member with details of this case.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the jobseeker's allowance. [4473]

Mr. Roger Evans: We have no plans to review the jobseeker's allowance. However, we have in place a long-term programme of monitoring and evaluation to measure whether jobseeker's allowance is achieving its policy objectives. The Benefits Agency and Employment Service have set up an extensive monitoring programme to assess implementation and performance of the new allowance with frequent reports to managers.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the procedures for determining whether an individual is capable of work under the jobseeker's allowance; and what account is taken of the local general practitioner's opinion. [4474]

Mr. Evans: Where there are doubts about a person's capacity for work under jobseeker's allowance, the case is referred to the adjudication officer. Whether a person is capable or incapable of work is determined under the same provisions that apply to incapacity benefit. A medical certificate issued by a person's own general practitioner is normally accepted as evidence of incapacity until such time as an assessment has been made under the all work incapacity test.

Under the short-term sickness provision in jobseeker's allowance, a person may be treated as capable of work for up to two weeks on two occasions in any one jobseeking period or in each 12 months where the jobseeking period lasts 12 months or more. A general practitioner's statement is not required for the purpose of determining whether these provisions apply.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to review the appeals procedure in respect of the jobseeker's allowance. [4475]

Mr. Evans: Full details of the Government's proposals for new appeals arrangements are set out in the Green Paper, "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security", Cm 3328 which was published on July 23. The proposals cover all social security benefits including jobseeker's allowance, child support maintenance, war pensions and Contributions Agency rulings.

The consultation period ended on 18 October, and the responses received are currently being independently analysed. We plan to publish the results of the consultation exercise early in the new year, and I will ensure that a copy is placed in the Library. Final decisions on the best way forward will be taken in the light of all the representations received.

Appeals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will place in the Library a draft of the form which benefit claimants have been required to use for lodging appeals since 21 October; and when the form itself will be available; [4799]

(2) what instructions he has issued to ensure that benefit appeals which do not comply with the requirement to use an approved form because the form is not yet available are admitted for hearing by tribunals; [4800]

(3) by what means he will monitor the effects of the benefit regulations which came into force on 21 October, with particular reference to (a) the number of oral hearings, and (b) the outcome of appeals to (i) social security, (ii) disability, (iii) medical and (iv) child support appeal tribunals. [4802]

Mr. Roger Evans: A copy of the new version of leaflet NI 246 "How to Appeal", including the form for appeal, has today been placed in the Library. This version replaces the April 1996 version, a copy of which was previously placed in the Library. Distribution of the new version to all Benefits Agency and Employment Service offices has now commenced and is scheduled for completion by the end of this week.

All Benefits Agency and independent tribunal service offices have clear guidance that all appeals lodged by letter or on the old print of the appeal form are acceptable, so long as they contain the information required. If sufficient information is not provided, the independent tribunal service will write to the appellant for the missing information. In these cases, the time limit for appealing may be extended by up to 14 days. After the new form is available, any appeal lodged in the form of a letter will still be acceptable, with the same proviso as above, as the regulations make clear.

The effects of the new regulations will be monitored. This will include using existing statistical information collected regularly on the outcome of appeals, by benefit, broken down between: hearings attended by the appellant and/or his representative and hearings not attended by either. This information will be based, of course, only on those appeals which proceed to a hearing; excluded will be appeals which are superseded or withdrawn, struck out or ruled out of jurisdiction.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many income support appeals were heard by social security appeal tribunals in each of the last four quarters for which information is available; how many and what percentage were decided in the appellant's favour where the appellant (a) attended the hearing but was not represented, (b) was represented but did not attend, (c) attended and was represented and (d) did not attend and was not represented. [4801]

Mr. Evans: The information requested is contained in the table.

Unemployment Benefit Claimants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in each month since April 1996 have signed on and received unemployment benefit when they had a working partner who was working 16 hours or more a week. [4911]

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested is not available.

HEALTH

Medical Research Council

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many research projects were refused funding by the Medical Research Council in each of the last three years. [3064]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

The number of research projects declined by the Medical Research Council in each of the past three years is as follows:

Year (academic)	Declined
1993–94	1,085
1994–95	1,224
1995–96	1,282

The MRC's mission is to support high-quality research, and applications are rejected because they are not rated and ranked sufficiently highly to succeed in the competition for funds.

Rikki Neave Case

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects his special inspectors to complete their investigation of Cambridgeshire social services and the case of Rikki Neave; and if he will make a statement. [4197]

Mr. Burns: We take very seriously the evidence of management failings and poor practice by Cambridgeshire social services department which have come to light in the Rikki Neave case. I have therefore asked the social services inspectorate to conduct an inspection of child protection services in Cambridgeshire next spring, following completion of the independent audit of child protection practice already commissioned by Cambridgeshire. Inspections are normally completed within three weeks of their start date, and I shall take a keen interest in the team's findings.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to issue interim guidance to social services departments to prevent a repetition of cases similar to that involving Rikki Neave; and if he will make a statement. [4198]

Mr. Burns: The Children Act 1989 provides a clear statutory framework within which local authorities must work to protect children from abuse. Section 31 sets out the circumstances in which authorities may apply for care orders or supervision orders if they are satisfied that a child is suffering, or is likely to suffer, significant harm. "Working Together Under The Children Act 1989", the Government's guide to inter-agency co-operation for the protection of children from abuse, provides clear and detailed guidance on the handling of cases of child abuse. It emphasises the importance for all agencies of taking decisive action when this is clearly indicated to protect children at risk of significant harm. We see no need to supplement "Working Together" with interim guidance at this stage.

Accident and Emergency Departments

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often approval has been sought from his Department for the closure of accident and emergency departments in the past 12 months; and if he will indicate in each case if the closure was subject to prior consultation. [3892]

Mr. Horam: Consultation is required by law on any substantial change in services proposed by a health authority. If the local community health council contests the proposals they are automatically referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health for a decision. One proposal substantitally to change an accident and emergency service has been referred to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State in the last 12 months.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria govern the recommended distance between (a) minor accident treatment service units and (b) accident and emergency departments. [3893]

Mr. Horam: The distance between these facilities will vary according to local conditions. Health authorities are responsible for determining what is needed in their area.

Mentally Ill Patients (Deaths)

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to health authorities and NHS trusts on the burial to mentally ill patients who have died in their care. [3931]

Mr. Horam: The Department issued guidance entitled "Patients who die in hospital" to health authorities and NHS trusts in January 1992, copies of which are available in the Library. This guidance includes a section on funerals for those who die in hospital where no arrangements are made by relatives.

Dental Services

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental inspections were undertaken by the community dental service from 1990 to the latest available date in each school, including special schools, within the Sunderland health authority area. [4418]

Mr. Malone: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the savings in dental health costs to Sunderland health authority resulting from artificial fluoridation of public water supplies for the five years after the implementation of the proposed scheme. [4416]

Mr. Malone: Studies have consistently shown that the prevalence of dental decay in fluoridated areas is between one third to one half lower than in comparable non–fluoridated water areas. Cost savings can be expected from reductions in the need for dental treatment in fluoridated areas.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many confirmed human cases of tuberculosis have been reported in each month since 1978; and if he will make a statement; [4489]

(2) if he will list the annual percentage of confirmed human cases of tuberculosis reported for each year since 1978, by region; [4712]

(3) what was the percentage of children (a) vaccinated and (b) unvaccinated against tuberculosis in each year since 1978 by region. [4726]

Mr. Horam: Information is not held centrally in the forms requested. The number of notifications of tuberculosis to the Office for National Statistics, and formerly the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, are published by local authority in the publications "MB2 Communicable Disease Statistics," annually, and "MB2 Infectious Disease Statistics", quarterly. Numbers of tuberculin skin tests by age and result and BCG vaccination by age are given in the Department of Health's publication, "Vaccination and immunisation, summary information, England". Information in this form has been published annually since 1988. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to undertake a programme of vaccination promotion for tuberculosis; and what assessment he has made of the benefits of such a programme. [4463]

Mr. Horam: The Government recommend that Bacillus Calmette-Guérin vaccine to protect against tuberculosis should be routinely offered to all school children the ages of 10 and 14 years. The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation, which advises the United Kingdom health departments on immunisation, reviewed this recommendation and advised that the schools immunisation programme should continue. Ministers have endorsed this and health authorities were advised of the result of the review in July 1996. In addition, immunisation continues to be offered to certain high-risk groups outside the routine school programme, including babies born to parents from countries with a high prevalence of tuberculosis.

The Health Education Authority published an information leaflet for parents about BCG immunisation for schoolchildren last year. This is currently being revised and will be qualitatively evaluated later this year. The Department of Health is also funding a pilot project to provide appropriate and non-intimidating information about tuberculosis for asylum seekers and refugees. The BCG programme has been a main plank of the UK's successful tuberculosis control programme.

Ambulance Service

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the level of funding of the ambulance service and about its response times. [4420]

Mr. Horam: Expenditure on ambulance services in England rose by 8 per cent. in real terms between 1991–92 and 1994–95, to a total of £533 million.

In 1995–96 ambulances responded to more than 2.6 million emergency calls within the patients charter target times, compared with some 2 million in 1992–93.

Superannuation (Nurses)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he expects to announce his decision on whether practice nurses can re-enter the NHS superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement; [4259]

(2) if he will undertake an actuarial study of the cost of allowing general practice nurses to re-enter the NHS superannuation scheme; and if he will make a statement. [4400]

Mr. Malone: We are currently considering the case for allowing general practitioners' practice staff to enter the national health service pension scheme and will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Alcohol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 years have been diagnosed as alcoholics in England in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4413]

Mr. Burns: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Cunningham) on 7 November, Official Report, columns 627–28.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the connection between drinking at an early age and alcohol-related problems in later life. [4409]

Mr. Burns: None. However, the Department is commissioning work to produce estimates of alcohol-related mortality, which will form a basis from which estimates of life years lost due to alcohol-related illness could be made.

Medicines (Cost)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce the time taken to reimburse pharmacists for the cost of medicines, to bring them into line with the repayment scale demanded by medicine wholesalers. [4504]

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gosport (Mr. Viggers) on 12 December 1995 at column 580.

Barnet General Hospital

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total sum spent by the Wellhouse Trust on consultancy fees relating to the private finance initiative for the rebuilding of Barnet general hospital, phase Ib. [3218]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally.

Asylum Seekers

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to assist local authorities in the funding of the cost of asylum seekers. [3122]

Mr. Burns: The Department of Health has established special grants to assist local authorities in supporting (i) children and their families, and (ii) unaccompanied children. Officials from relevant Government Departments are also working with the local authorities most concerned to assess the scale of the problem of adult asylum seekers.

NHS Facilities (Repair and Maintenance Backlog)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outstanding repair and maintenance backlog at NHS facilities by regional health authority for each year since 1988. [4300]

Mr. Horam: The outstanding repair and maintenance backlog by regional health authority is shown in the table. The information is available only from 1989–90.

The figures include estimated costs for maintenance on all properties in the NHS due to be replaced, not used for patient care, awaiting planned preventive maintenance and awaiting disposal. They also include an element for meeting statutory and safety standards.

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what funding has been spent in each region on voluntary sector HIV treatment and prevention work by health authorities in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96; [4301]

(2) what proportion of the AIDS (Control) Act 1982 reports for 1995–96 have been received by his Department; which reports are yet to be received; and of the reports so far received, what funding has been spent on HIV treatment, community care and prevention work in each region on (i) voluntary sector and (ii) statutory bodies by health authorities in (a) 1993–94, (b) 1994–95 and (c) 1995–96. [4302]

Mr. Horam: The funding spent by health authorities in the statutory and voluntary sectors for HIV treatment and prevention in the years 1993–94, 1994–95 and 1995–96 is set out in the table. Information on sums spent by health authorities on community care for both sectors is not available centrally.

Ninety-six per cent. of the AIDS Control Act reports for 1995–96 have been received to date. Those outstanding are from Camden and Islington, Avon Somerset and Walsall health authorities. The totals in the table for 1995–96 are therefore incomplete.

Methicillin Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number and percentage of patients who have contracted (a) MRSA and (b) other infections in hospitals in each of the past five years. [4662]

Mr. Horam: The Department has made no such estimates. Data on the incidence of methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus compiled by the Public Health Laboratory Service from numbers of isolates for which hospitals have requested specialist typing show a total of 2,286 confirmed reports from hospital incidents in 1992, 4,592 in 1993, 10,818 in 1994, 17,063 in 1995 and 21,272 until the end of October 1996. These figures represent the number of patients affected by MRSA, not the number infected, as about 80 per cent. of people who acquire MRSA, carry it harmlessly and do not suffer infection. An incident is three or more patients with the same strain in a month from the same hospital.

The results of the "Second National Prevalence Survey of Infection in Hospitals," published earlier this year, showed an overall prevalence rate for all types of hospital acquired infection of 9 per cent., compared with 9.2 per cent. in 1980. The survey, undertaken jointly by the Hospital Infection Society, the Public Health Laboratory Service and the Infection Control Nurses Association, was conducted between May 1993 and June 1994 and covered 37,000 patients across 23 specialties in 157 hospitals in the United Kingdom and Eire. There have been no published national studies on the incidence of hospital acquired infection, but the incidence rate is generally thought likely to be around half the prevalence rate.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for making MRSA a notifiable condition; and if he will make a statement on the reliability of current statistics on MRSA infection and deaths. [4663]

Mr. Horam: MRSA infection can take the form of many different diseases from trivial skin infections to pneumonia or septicaemia. It would be wholly impracticable to make all these diseases notifiable. Appropriate measures to control MRSA do not depend on it being notifiable.

MRSA does not have a distinct code within the revision of the International Classification of Diseases used for encoding death registration data at the Office for National Statistics. Consequently, there are no centrally held statistics on deaths from this cause. The Public Health Laboratory Service publishes aggregate data on numbers of cases of certain severe infections, some which are due to MRSA which are voluntarily reported to it by hospitals. It also publishes data derived from isolates of MRSA sent to it for specialist typing. Although these data give helpful indications of trends, it is not possible from either of these data sets to identify the total number of cases of MRSA infection.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the use of antibiotics in (a) the spread of methicillin resistant staphyloccus aureus and meningitis and (b) resistance to anti-malaria drugs and to anti-TB drugs; and if he will make a statement. [4665]

Mr. Horam: Bacteria have the ability to develop resistance to antibiotics which are normally effective against them through exposure to these drugs. The emergence of some resistant bacteria such as MRSA is therefore a consequence of the necessity of antibiotic treatment in modern medical practice. Prevention of the spread of existing MRSA is dependent on effective infection control arrangement. In the case of tuberculosis, there is good evidence to relate the emergence of drug resistant tuberculosis to inadequate treatment of initially drug sensitive tuberculosis. In the United Kingdom, standard protocols have been in use for the treatment of tuberculosis for many years and the incidence of drug resistance is very low. New guidance issued this year aims to keep it this way.

Recently published research conducted in Gloucester into general practitioner antibiotic prescribing and meningitis has produced some interesting observations—including a possible link between meningitis and the high use of one particular type of antibiotic in towns in Gloucestershire in 1987. Such a hypothesis is, however, speculative and the findings need to be tested in other areas. The Public Health Laboratory Service will be asking its meningococcal working group for its recommendations on further work.

Drug resistance of Plasmodium falciparum malaria to the anti-malarial drug cholroquine has increased in both intensity and geographical distribution over the last few years, and resistance to the newer antimalarial, mefloquine, is now a problem in parts of south-east Asia. These facts have to be borne in mind when considering an appropriate malaria prevention strategy for travel to endemic areas.

Refugees

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the expenditure by each London borough on support for refugees and their families under the terms of the National Assistance Act 1948 as amended by subsequent legislation. [4669]

Mr. Burns: Special grant report No. 22 relating to the persons from abroad children's grant was debated on Wednesday 6 November. First claims for funding will be submitted by 31 December. Officials are in close contact with local authorities with regard to estimates of the cost of supporting childless adult asylum seekers under the National Assistance Act.

Edgware General Hospital

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) 999 emergencies, (b) general practitioner referred emergencies and (c) self-referred emergencies have been received at Edgware general hospital in each month of 1996. [3514]

Mr. Malone [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The information requested on attendances at the Edgware hospital accident and emergency department in 1996 is as follows:

Kidney Patients

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has given to NHS dialysis centres in respect of the re-use of blood lines and dialysers; what assessment he has made of the compliance of NHS staff with manufacturers' recommendations; and if he will make a statement. [4913]

Mr. Horam: No specific guidance has been issued to national health service dialysis centres on this issue; however, general guidance on the re-use of medical devices supplied for single use was provided to the NHS in a device bulletin, DB 9501, published by the Medical Devices Agency in January 1995. Copies will be placed in the Library.

The Medical Devices Agency has issued general guidance advising users to read the manufacturer's instructions for use before using any device.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what funds are currently made available to provide patients suffering kidney failure with (a) disconnect systems, (b) EPO drug treatment for anaemia and (c) reimbursement of the additional cost of overnight dialysis for those who work. [4914]

Mr. Horam: There is no specific funding for patients suffering kidney failure. Health authorities are given general allocations for hospital and community health services to purchase health care services for their resident population. It is for individual health authorities in consultation with the provider of services to decide the level and type of work of services purchased, taking account of local circumstances and national policies and priorities.

Correspondence

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to reply to the letter of 9 August from the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East concerning care homes in the north-west. [4976]

Mr. Burns: A reply was sent on 18 November 1996.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many organisations have been awarded funds from the national lottery five good causes; what is the total amount in pounds; and how much of the money in percentage terms from each of the five good causes has not yet been paid out to these organisations. [3278]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The rate at which funds flow to successful schemes is determined by the time it takes to conclude award negotiations and the requirements to make staged payments. It is less than 18 months since the awards process began.

When a lottery award announcement is made, it is not necessarily to a project which is ready to begin immediately. This is likely to be true of only a few well planned and/or relatively straightforward projects. In most cases, further negotiation will be necessary. An award announcement should, therefore, be looked at more as an award in principle—as is the case with private finance initiative schemes—where it is accepted that some work still needs to be done before the project can get off the ground. Based on advice, the typical time gaps between award and spending on a project can be between nine and 15 months for major construction schemes and three and six months for smaller schemes.

The lottery distributors have identified the main reasons for such time lags. These are:

Locating partnership funding. A common approach is to apply for lottery funding first and then confirm partnership funding contributions. Most distributors wish to pay out lottery money pro rata to partnership spending, although this is not a hard and fast rule and distributors can help with short-term cash flow difficulties. On committed schemes, each £1 of lottery funds is currently matched by £1.41 of partnership money.

Detailed design of buildings etc. These may have to be submitted where sketch drawings have been accepted at assessment stage. Design competitions must sometimes be held. My Department has asked distributors to ensure lottery-funded buildings are well designed.

Obtaining full planning permission or listed building consent.

Re-negotiating leases with landlords where the scheme involves an extension or improvement to an existing facility.

Completing legal documentation on conditions. This can be quite time consuming given the funding arrangements and novelty of many schemes.

Tendering of projects—this can be made more difficult by lack of administrative support in some voluntary organisations. Higher value schemes may have to be advertised in the Official Journal of the European Community and European Union rules on tendering met.

Seasonal factors can affect work on construction projects (especially true of educational institutions where work might be able to take place only during the school holidays).

The expenditure profile for small and large construction projects often means that initial expenditure is low.

The distributors do, of course, wish to move projects effectively from award to completion. I do not, however, see any easy way to shorten the process, but my Department will continue to monitor this situation. It is important that capital projects are set up correctly otherwise they may not achieve value for money.

Distributors must also avoid forcing applicants to do too much preparatory work and spend too much money before the award in principle. Competition for lottery money is fierce, and is likely to become more so as the nature of the projects which the distributing bodies can support widens.

Payments for lottery schemes are staged to reflect the applicants' requirements for the funds. It would be imprudent to pay all the funds in advance. Nearly two thirds of all award recipients have received some funds.

As at 6 November, the figures and the number of award recipients in receipt of their first payment from the lottery are:

Good cause sector	Number of awards	Total value of awards £ million	Total grant payments to date £ million	Percentage of total value of grants awarded but not yet paid out	Percentage of awardees in receipt of first payments

ENVIRONMENT

Property Blight (Compensation)

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has so far been made by the interdepartmental committee on compensation for property affected by rail and road schemes. [2000]

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many submissions he has received on the consultation paper on blight arising from major infrastructure projects; [5238]

(2) when he expects the interdepartmental working group on blight to report; and what plans he has to bring forward proposals to implement its recommendations. [5239]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the progress report of the interdepartmental working group on blight.

This group, which was set up in March, published a discussion paper in June. Sixty-one responses were received. A sub-group held discussions with officials in France, Germany and the Netherlands, and further briefing was received in respect of Belgium, Spain, Italy, Cyprus, the USA and Japan.

The Halifax building society has been invited to undertake a study into trends in property prices in areas which have experienced major infrastructure developments. Work on this study is in hand. A further study, commissioned in October 1995, into the operation of compulsory purchase procedures concludes this month. The group will be considering the final report of this study to see how its findings might inform the group's own work.

The group is now considering a range of options for changes to law and practice. Their consideration will include an assessment both of direct costs of implementing change, and of the wider implications for compulsory acquisition and compensation. I have asked that the final report should be submitted as early as possible in the new year. Any changes which we might propose to existing law and practice would be subject to consultation in the usual way.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4492]

Mr. Clappison: My Department is the lead Department for ensuring that Government policies and programmes, including its own, take proper account of environmental concerns, in accordance with the 1990 environment White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", and "Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy", published in 1994.

To this end, the Government have made a repeated commitment in successive White Paper annual reports to subject their policies to environmental appraisal. In 1991, the Department published "Policy Appraisal and the Environment", which gives extensive guidance on how to integrate environmental considerations into Government policy assessments. Green Ministers recently reaffirmed the need for all Departments to have adequate systems to ensure that the environmental implications of their policies were properly considered. Consultants are evaluating Government Departments' experiences with the guide and will report early next year. Green Ministers intend to publish a booklet of case studies in the new year, showing good examples of environmental appraisal in Departments.

My Department aims continually to reduce the impact of its own activities on the environment and to improve the management of its own resources. Its management audit services division has been trained to undertake environmental audits and has, for example, recently examined management and waste issues as part of the Department's strategy to reduce waste by 15 per cent. over two years.

Another of the Department's published objectives is to reduce the environmental impact of its buildings, where practicable, by undertaking objective assessments using BREEAM—the Building Research Establishment's environmental assessment method. Preliminary assessments of the Department's two new headquarters buildings—Eland house and Ashdown house in central London—have been carried out. As a result, the designs incorporate features such as the use of energy-efficient double-glazed panels, specially treated to reflect heat back into the building; displacement ventilation with static cooling and heating; combined heat and power systems, which use less gas and use waste heat to supply hot water, space heating and power for the cooling system; efficient boilers, with low nitrogen dioxide burners for supplementary heating; heat exchangers and heat exhaust recovery to avoid the loss of energy to the atmosphere in cooling towers.

My Department supports the use of BREEAM across the wider Government estate and green Ministers agreed recently that all Departments should use the BREEAM system when commissioning new or substantial refurbishment of existing ones. My Department has also commissioned the Environment Agency to produce do it yourself environmental performance checklist for premises managers on the Government estate, which will help to promote further improvement in the use of energy, water and other resources, in reducing waste and saving money.

My Department has been active in promoting environmental management and auditing more widely. As the United Kingdom competent body for administering the EC eco-management and audit scheme—EMAS—the Department has for the last two years promoted the scheme widely to industry—through national advertising campaigns and regional events; by publishing guides about the scheme and how it operates; by producing information videos and regular newsletters; through direct mailing to business; and by the introduction of a grant—Small company environmental energy management scheme—to help smaller businesses participate in the scheme. The UK has also led the way in promoting EMAS by introducing the first national extension of the scheme, now a fully operational version in the local government sector. My Department is conducting an exercise to test the feasibility of applying EMAS in a pilot area of housing policy and programme expenditure.

The Government strongly encourage the take-up of EMAS by business because the scheme provides a rigorous but voluntary framework for managing, improving and reporting publicly on environmental performance. The scheme is also proving to be an effective tool for improving efficiency and competitiveness. Case studies, based on the first industrial sites registered under EMAS, and which demonstrate the environmental and business benefits of the scheme, will be published shortly.

In partnership with the Department of Trade and Industry, my Department sponsors the environmental technology best practice programme to promote better environmental practices that help to reduce business costs for UK industry and commerce. The programme disseminates information and advice on environmental technologies and techniques, including the benefits of implementing environmental management systems and audits. Examples of best practice are promoted throughout industry by means of environmental performance guides, best practice case studies and guides, workshops, seminars and other events.

In promoting EMAS, my Department has also encouraged take-up of the complementary British industry standard for environmental management systems, BS 7750. This was the first standard of its kind in the world, coinciding with the development of EMAS, and it has contributed greatly to the agreement of a new international standard, ISO 14001, which will be replacing national standards and will provide industry with a convenient route towards EMAS registration. I am delighted that my Department's own office services division has recently been awarded a certificate of compliance with both BS 7750 and ISO 14001 for its environmental management system—the first award to a central Government Department.

EU Environmental Directives

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the report on the proposal in the European Parliament for a council directive amending directive 85/337/EEC on the assessment of the effects of certain public and private projects on the environment, A4–0343/96. [4723]

Sir Paul Beresford: The common position adopted by the European Council of Ministers on a directive amending directive 85/337/EEC will greatly improve the consistency and quality of decision making within the European Community. It is now for the European Commission to consider the report and put forward an opinion to the Council.

Solrec, Heysham (Air Pollution)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what caused the release into the atmosphere of material being processed at Solrec at Heysham; and what action he has taken to prevent a recurrence. [4714]

Mr. Clappison: On 19 August 1996 there was an unauthorised release from the process for the application of steam distillation to produce solid residues at Solrec in Heysham. This process is used for solvent recovery. The unauthorised release was caused by a runaway exothermic reaction in a vessel, which caused pressure to build up in the vessel, resulting in a controlled release via a safety device.

As a result of the incident, the Environment Agency served a prohibition notice on Solrec Ltd. under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. This prohibits the company from operating the process until it has produced a procedure to demonstrate that the process can be performed without producing exothermic decomposition of the residues.

I further understand from the Environment Agency that Solrec intends to abandon the particular process which gave rise to the unauthorised release.

Sustainable Development (EU Report)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the report by the European Parliament on the review of the European Community programme of policy and action in relation to the environment and sustainable development, A4-0300/96 with reference to his Department's policy on sustainable development. [4724]

Mr. Clappison: My Department will be assessing in due course the first reading opinion of the European Parliament on the report, given on 13 November 1996.

Rainforest Conservation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report on the outcome of the meeting of the conference of the parties to the convention on biological diversity, with particular reference to progress made to the conservation of tropical rainforests. [4507]

Mr. Clappison: This meeting, held in Buenos Aires from 4 to 15 November, successfully reached agreement on continued progress under the convention on a number of fronts. These included commitment to priority work on the assessment and monitoring of biodiversity, including the endorsement of a worldwide initiative for taxonomy developed by the subsidiary body to the convention earlier this year. Work programmes were agreed on agricultural and forest biodiversity. The latter will complement and not duplicate the work of the intergovernmental panel on forests and any successor process.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State attended the ministerial segment on 13 and 14 November and called for greater focus in priority setting under this convention. He also stressed the importance of national target setting and reporting, along the lines already under way in the UK, to enable global assessment of progress and efforts to implement the convention.

Sellafield Nuclear Plant (Discharges)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the permissible limits set for the annual discharge of nitrous oxide from Sellafield; and what quantities of nitrous oxide were emitted by British Nuclear Fuels from Sellafield in each of the past 10 years. [4721]

Mr. Clappison: The Environment Agency monitors releases of, and set limits for, oxides of nitrogen NO_x under the integrated pollution control regime. The description, oxides of nitrogen, includes nitrous oxide N_2O as well as nitric oxide NO and nitrogen dioxide NO_2.

Oxides of nitrogen were released by the large boilers, which were regulated under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. These have now closed and data are available only for the years 1993 and 1994, as follows:

Year	Annual release limit tonnes per year	Actual release tonnes per year
1993	1,550	177.3
1994	2,132	200

Integrated pollution control authorisations have been issued this year for the Magnox and Thorp processes with the following limits for NO_x:

Process	Annual release limit tonnes per year
Magnox	35
Thorp	90

Actual release data will be available from 1997.

Planning Constraints

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that planning constraints on agricultural buildings are applied equally to small and large farm holdings; and if he will make a statement. [4923]

Sir Paul Beresford: We have no plans to amend the thresholds for agricultural permitted development rights in the Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995, under which holdings of less than 5 hectares enjoy more limited rights than larger holdings.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5085]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitment arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Housing (Population Threshold)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the basis for the proposed population threshold to be used as the main criterion in defining a rural area for the purposes of the rural exemption for housing association tenants from the purchase grant scheme; and if he will make a statement. [5010]

Mr. Clappison: The new purchase grant scheme will allow more housing association tenants the choice of buying their own home at a discount funded by a Government grant. Landlords will receive the full market value of any property sold under the scheme, and will have to set aside sale proceeds to provide replacement properties to help other families in need.

We announced in last year's rural White Paper our proposal to exclude small rural villages from the scheme. The aim of the rural exemption is to protect the supply of social housing in small rural villages where there would be a particular difficulty in securing replacement homes. In larger towns there is greater scope for a replacement home to be provided either through development or the purchase of existing properties.

We have consulted on the detailed proposed designations for every county and area of England using a population guideline of 3,000 people. We believe that this identifies those small settlements that need to be protected, and it is consistent with the approach of our rural housing programmes. We indicated that we would consider cases referred to us where a settlement's population exceeded 3,000, but we would want to establish that there was a special reason why the settlement concerned faced similar problems to smaller settlements in replacing homes sold.

We expect to announce the outcome of the consultation exercise shortly.

Mr right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has also consulted on a different approach to be used in Wales.

Pleasure Boats

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the basis for the decision to remove the requirement for local authority licences for pleasure boats on waters owned or managed by British Waterways and the Environment Agency; and what is the expected saving to (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector from the proposed deregulation order. [4978]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Powers available to local authorities under the Public Health Acts Amendment Act 1907 to license pleasure boats duplicate those available to British Waterways on navigations that it manages. The Government have therefore decided to disapply the local authority powers in those circumstances. Powers available to the Environment Agency are less comprehensive than those of British Waterways. In the light of the recent consultation exercise, the Government are therefore reconsidering the inclusion of the Environment Agency in the proposed deregulation order. It is not possible to estimate the expected savings, but in future hire boat businesses which operate on deregulated waters and which have been subject to local authority licensing will benefit financially by having to pay licence fees to only one licensing authority.

Bricks

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of weeks' supply of bricks held in stock. [5364]

Mr. Clappison: At the end of September, the latest date for which information is available, there were just over one billion bricks in stock, representing some 17½ weeks' deliveries at current rates of delivery.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list the ways in which her Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if she will make a statement. [4542]

Mr. Robin Squire: We are committed to carrying out the Department's work efficiently, with minimal negative environmental impact. We have undertaken energy audits, and included environmental objectives in the Department's business plan. Our energy consumption continues to fall in line with Government policy. For example, following the connection of the Department's Moorfoot building to the Sheffield combined heat and power station in 1995, 95 per cent. of Moorfoot's heat now comes from a green source.

In October, I launched the schools environmental assessment method which encourages and enables schools to evaluate their environmental impact, and which also includes revised energy targets for new school buildings.

School Inspections (Manningham)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what were the main conclusions of the Office for Standards in Education report following the inspection of schools in the Manningham area of Bradford; if she will list the schools included in that inspection; and if she will make a statement. [4387]

Mr. Robin Squire: This is a matter for Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Chris Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information is collected centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) her Department and (ii) agencies accountable to her Department. [5086]

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the PFI. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregated projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4544]

Mr. Willetts: My Department and its agencies play a full part in supporting the initiatives being carried forward in response to the 1990 White Paper, "This Common Inheritance", including membership of the green Ministers group. The Department implements an annual green housekeeping action plan, which is subject to regular audit.

Examples of specific initiatives undertaken include:

1. Work following a study into the feasibility of contract energy management has resulted in a reduction of over-capacity in the water heating system in the Cabinet Office buildings at Nos. 68 to 72 Whitehall and in Downing street. The remodelled system provides flexibility whilst continuing to recognise the need for standby facilities to be readily available.

2. In the security facilities executive, the Government car service was one of the first organisations to sign up to the London clean air charter and has adopted CityClean and low sulphur diesel fuels. All GCS cars are fitted with catalytic converters and gas powered vehicles are on trial.

Where appropriate, further examples are recorded in the Department's and its agencies' annual reports.

Mr. Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4543]

The Deputy Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General.

PRIME MINISTER

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4538]

The Prime Minister: For these purposes, my office is part of the Cabinet Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sudan

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of his Department's provision for the Sudan; what plans there are to increase it; and if he will make a statement. [4783]

Mr. Hanley: The UK has committed nearly £13 million in humanitarian assistance to Sudan and Sudanese refugees bilaterally and through the European Community since the start of 1995. Future assistance will depend on levels of humanitarian need.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is collated centrally on (a) the long–term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5084]

Mr. Hanley: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Royal Family (Overseas Visits)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, Official Report, column 167, how much of the total cost to his Department arising from visits abroad by members of the royal family in 1995–96 related to clothing. [3204]

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 11 November 1996]: In 1995–96 the total cost to this Department of clothing for official visits overseas by members of the royal family and those accompanying them was £47,452.

As I advised in my answer to the hon. Member on 18 July Official Report, column 610, high profile and worthy representation of Britain abroad inevitably involves additional expenditure on clothes by members of the royal family and certain of those accompanying them.

It is right that such expenditure is met by the Government for official overseas visits undertaken at the Government's request.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5081]

Mr. Streeter: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under PFI. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under PFI would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Attorney-General what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5082]

The Attorney-General: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information of future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projection of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

WALES

Publicity

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost of staff, employed full-time or part-time by his Department, to provide information and publicity in 1996–97. [3574]

Mr. Hague: For 1996–97, I estimate the cost of staff employed in my press office to be £335,000 and in my publicity branch to be £270,000.

Alcoholism

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 years have been diagnosed as alcoholics in Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4411]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally. However, the number of finished consultant episodes in NHS hospitals in Wales in each of the last five years where the primary diagnosis was alcohol dependency syndrome is given in the following table. The figures do not relate to the number of people treated as one person may have more than one finished consultant episode during the period. Only those admitted to NHS hospitals are included.

Finished consultant episodes with a primary diagnosis of alcohol dependency syndrome

	People aged under 18	People aged 18 and over	Total
1991–92	10	1,261	1,271
1992–93	5	1,316	1,321
1993–94	3	1,191	1,194
1994–95	6	1,252	1,258
1995–96[1]	4	746	750

[1] Data for 1995–96 are not comparable to earlier years as records are not yet available for all hospitals and the diagnosis code used was different from earlier years.

General Practitioners

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received regarding difficulties in appointing general practitioners in Blaenau Gwent. [4265]

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has received two such representations during the last two years.

Teachers (Sickness)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of schoolteachers in Wales (a) retiring and (b) obliged to take extended leave as a result of (i) sickness and (ii) nervous strain in Wales between 1985 and 1995. [3681]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Information on extended leave taken by teachers is not held centrally. Information on the number of teachers retiring on infirmity grounds is shown in the following table:

Fish-eating Birds (Killing)

Mr. Ron Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many licences he has issued during the last 12 months for the taking of piscivorous birds; how many birds of what species have been taken under each such licence; and on what evidence such licences have been issued. [4744]

Mr. Hague: During the 12-month period 1 October 1995 to 30 September 1996, 13 licences permitting the limited shooting of piscivorous birds were issued.

Under these licences, a total of eight cormorants and 13 goosanders were taken. Licences for the shooting of piscivorous birds, as a means of reinforcing other scaring methods, are granted taking account of information supplied by the applicant and on advice provided by ADAS following site visits and consultations with other interested bodies.

The number of birds shot against five of the licences is listed in the following table:

Birds	Number	Number	Number	Number	Number
Goosanders	1	6	3	0	3
Cormorants	0	3	1	1	3

No birds were shot under the remaining eight licences.

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress he has made to date on the implementation of the mitigation measures associated with the Cardiff bay barrage; and what recent relevant communications he has had with the European Commission. [4745]

Mr. Hague: The establishment of the bird reserve compensation measures in an operational matter for the corporation, assisted by the Land Authority for Wales.

My officials have recently reported the following progress to the European Commission:

- 301 hectares (743 acres), that is over 75 per cent. of the land required for the reserve has already been secured by agreement and discussions are continuing on the remainder;
- a planning application is being considered by the local planning authority;
- the corporation has tendered the works contract for development of the reserve and its objective is to establish the reserve before the start of the impoundment of water within Cardiff bay in 1998.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5073]

Mr. Hague: The Department maintains a full record of information about private finance initiative projects it has approved. Information about long-term revenue commitments resulting from PFI projects will be published in the Welsh Office's departmental report and in the "Financial Statement and Budget Report", published by HM Treasury.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Council

Sir Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council held in Brussels on 18 and 19 November; and if he will make a statement. [5466]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I represented the United Kingdom at the Agriculture Council in Brussels on 18 November, accompanied by my noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Scottish Office. The Council formally adopted the legislative text giving effect to changes in the EU beef regime agreed in principle at the Council in October. Germany maintained its negative vote.

The Council had a first discussion of proposals for a system identification and registration of bovine animals, together with a linked proposal on the labelling of beef and beef products. I urged the Council to proceed quickly with a technical examination of the proposal on identification and registration so as to reach early conclusions and so facilitate the work on a computerised cattle traceability system already begun in the United Kingdom. I welcomed efforts to improve information about beef and beef products for consumers, but cautioned against placing heavy bureaucratic burdens on small operators. I also took the opportunity of this Council meeting to report on the progress made in the United Kingdom on BSE eradication and in particular in meeting the pre-conditions laid down in the June Florence agreement.

The Council had general debates on proposals for amendments to EU support arrangements for durum wheat, and for a common organisation of the market in potatoes. On the latter, I indicated the UK Government's readiness to support a genuinely lightweight EU regime. The Council also drew up a declaration urging progress on establishing a European agency for veterinary and phytosanitary inspection.

On animal welfare issues, I joined my German and Swedish colleagues in pressing the Commission to bring forward its review and proposals on battery cages for laying hens, and proposals on staging posts and vehicle standards for the protection of animals during transport. I also urged the Commission to ensure the proper implementation of Commission decision 96/239 regarding consignments of beef and beef products made from material not originating in the United Kingdom.

The presidency and the Agriculture Commissioner reported to the Council on the conference on rural development which the presidency had hosted in Cork on 7 to 9 November. I welcomed the impetus which the Cork conference conclusions would give to further thinking on rural development policy and the evolution of the common agricultural policy, especially in view of the need to adjust that policy to take account of international trade pressures and the prospect of EU enlargement.

Arable Area Payments

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money his Department spent in each region of England in 1995–96 on (a) set-aside payments under the arable area scheme and (b) arable area payments. [4220]

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The table gives figures for each MAFF region for claims in respect of (a) set-aside and (b) total payments under 1995 arable area payments scheme. The amounts paid will have been slightly lower because of the reductions made for various reasons. As such reductions normally have to be calculated on the basis of the total claim, which may include land in more than one region, it is not possible to give figures for the total amounts paid on a regional basis.

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what area of land was set aside in 1995–96 under the arable area scheme for each region of England. [4221]

Mr. Hogg [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The areas of land set aside on which payments were made in each MAFF region under the 1995 arable area payments scheme were as follows:

	Hectare
Anglia	137,258
East Midlands	97,010
North East	75,794
Northern	17,847
North Mercia	22,724
South Mercia	39,151

Wessex	34,369

Dr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many payments were made in England in 1995–96 for set-aside under the arable area scheme (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000, (f) £25,001 and £50,000, (g) £50,001 and £75,000, (h) £75,001 and £100,000, (i) £100,001 and £150,000, (j) £150,001 and £200,000, (k) £200,001 and £250,000, (l) £250,001 and £300,000, (m) £300,001 and £350,000, (n) £350,001 to £400,000, (o) £400,001 and £450,000, (p) £450,001 and £500,000 and (q) over £500,000. [4223]

Mr. Hogg [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The table sets out the number of set-aside payments made under the 1995 arable area payments scheme in the bands requested. Some claimants will have received more than one payment.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5088]

Mr. Boswell: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the PFI. This is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure expected to arise from signed contracts under PFI would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Meat Processing Industry

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Department has had with Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group Ltd. relating to problems for the meat processing industry arising from the BSE crisis. [5048]

Mrs. Browning: My Department holds regular meetings with various trade organisations representing the meat processing industry, including the British Meat Manufacturers Association and the UK Association of Frozen Food Producers. Representatives from the Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group Ltd. have attended these meetings, which regularly discuss problems facing the meat processing industry arising from the market disruption caused by consumer concern about BSE.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Palestine (Aid)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has been given to the Palestinian state since the devolution of power from Israel. [4916]

Dr. Liam Fox: The Palestinian Authority assumed responsibility for Gaza and Jericho in May 1994. Bilateral development assistance given to the west bank and Gaza for 1994–95 and 1995–96 was £8.9 million. Additionally, we provide approximately one sixth of the EC's 500 mecu—£417 million—aid to the Palestinians, pledged for 1994 to 1998.

Nigeria

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what are the time scale and objectives of the Commonwealth ministerial action group mission to Nigeria; [5039]

(2) what plans the Commonwealth ministerial action group mission has to meet (a) Moshood Abiola,(b) Olusegun Obasanjo and (c) Dr. Beko Ransome-Kuti; [5036]

(3) which political prisoners the Commonwealth ministerial action group mission to Nigeria has requested meetings with; and what response it has received from the Nigerian Government; [5037]

(4) if the Commonwealth ministerial action group mission's meetings with Nigerian political prisoners will be attended by Nigerian Government representatives; [5038]

(5) what guarantees the Commonwealth ministerial action group mission to Nigeria has received regarding access to political prisoners; [5042]

(6) what discussions the Commonwealth ministerial action group mission to Nigeria plans to have with the Nigerian Government regarding (a) the restoration of democracy and (b) human rights in Nigeria. [5040]

Dr. Liam Fox: The Commonwealth ministerial action group will visit Nigeria on 19 and 20 November. The group has been tasked to assess Nigeria's adherence to the Harare principles of good governance and make recommendations to the Commonwealth Heads of Government on its suspension from the association.

The group has been working to encourage the Nigerian authorities to take immediate steps to improve human rights, including the release of political prisoners, and to restore accountable civilian government. It has also requested meetings with a wide range of people, including Chief Moshood Abiola.

Middle East Aid

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has been given to (a) Israel, (b) Egypt, (c) Jordan, (d) Lebanon and (e) Syria in each of the last five years. [4915]

Dr. Liam Fox: UK aid to Israel, Egypt, Jordan, the Lebanon and Syria has been provided on both a bilateral and a multilateral basis.

At £2,154 million in 1996–97, British development assistance makes a substantial contribution to reducing poverty and promoting sustainable development. An increasing proportion of ODA's bilateral budget is concentrated on the poorest countries in Africa and south Asia who need assistance the most and can make the best use of it.

European Union Aid Budget

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the European Union budget commitment appropriation for (a) B7-5010, co-financing of development projects carried out by non-governmental organisations and public awarenesss campaigns, (b) B7-5050, aid for population policies and programmes in developing countries and (c) B7-5046, the fight against AIDS in developing countries in each year since 1993. [4896]

Dr. Liam Fox: The European Union budget commitment appropriations for each of the years 1993, 1994, 1995 and 1996 respectively were as follows (sterling equivalents, at today's exchange rate of £1 = 1.2785 ecu, shown in brackets):

Budget line	Title	1993	1994	1995	1996

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funding was allocated for how many and for which projects for (a) B7-5010, co-financing of development projects carried out by non-governmental organisations and public awareness campaigns, (b) B7-5050, aid for population policies and programmes in developing countries and (c) B7-5046, the fight against AIDS in developing countries European Union budget lines in each year since 1993; and which NGOs and agencies are responsible for implementing these projects. [4897]

Dr. Fox: I shall write to my hon. Friend shortly.

TRANSPORT

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4961]

Mr. Bowis: The Department has a European unit, devoted very largely to work connected to the European Union, which has a budget of just over £500,000. Beyond that, European Union matters are fully integrated into other policy and administration matters, and the sums of time and money spent in dealing with them cannot be disaggregated.

Walking

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons the national travel survey excludes consideration of distances covered on foot during employment. [4478]

Mr. Bowis: The primary purpose of the national travel survey is to estimate the demand for personal travel. This comprises travel for private purposes or for work or education, provided that the main reason for the journey is for the traveller himself or herself to reach the destination.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the information in the latest issue of the national travel survey in respect of walking. [4477]

Mr. Bowis: The 1993 to 1995 report on the national travel survey contained a number of tables showing the contribution of walking to figures for personal travel. The main section shows that the average number of journeys walked per person and the average distance walked have fallen over recent years and we have therefore set up a steering group to look at the causes of this and at ways that have been shown to be effective in encouraging walking. I have chaired the first two meetings of this group.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the national walking strategy. [4476]

Mr. Bowis: I have formed and chaired the first two meetings of a steering group whose membership comes from a range of interested parties. The group is drafting a discussion document which will invite comments from a wider constituency to help establish what measures may be commended as good practice to encourage walking as a mode of transport, as a component in journeys with public transport and as an alternative to the car for short journeys.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5075]

Mr. Bowis: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the PFI. This information is now being collected. As indicated in the Government's response, aggregate projections of the level of expenditure expected to arise from signed PFI contracts, including those in the transport sector, will be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Speeding

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of his recent television campaign on speeding on maximum and minimum speeds; and what other measures he plans to use to monitor the campaign's effect. [4479]

Mr. Bowis: The objective of the kill your speed campaign is to make driving too fast for the conditions—such as 40mph in a 30mph zone—as socially unacceptable as drink driving. That requires a long-term campaign to change entrenched social attitudes before behaviour can be affected.

Independent research shows a high awareness of the recent advertising with 65 per cent. of all drivers recalling the publicity. It also shows that just six months after the launch there has been a positive shift—from 42 per cent. to 50 per cent. in the proportion of drivers who felt that they could personally drive more slowly to avoid accidents. There has also been a positive shift in the perceived safe speed on residential roads.

The Department will continue to monitor the campaign with both quantitative research and consumer focus groups to evolve the message in the most effective way. We also monitor vehicle speed in residential and urban areas.

North-eastern and North-western Traffic Areas (Merger)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the transfer of work of the north-western traffic area office to the north-eastern traffic area office indicating which areas of operation will not be transferred. [5172]

Mr. Bowis: Detailed arrangements for handling the transfer of work from the north-western traffic area office in Manchester, which is closing next year, have not yet been finalised.

Disabled People (Access to Public Transport)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Members for Knowsley, South (Mr. O'Hara) and the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) of 28 October, Official Report, column 43, when he expects to publish regulations and guidance under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 in relation to access to public transport for disabled people. [5128]

Mr. Bowis: Discussions are being held with the transport industries and with the disabled persons transport advisory committee on the technical specifications for vehicle accessibility that will form the basis of the regulations.

We plan to publish our proposals for the taxi accessibility regulations early in the new year. Proposals for public service vehicles and for rail vehicles will follow shortly afterwards. There will be informal consultation with groups representing disabled people, industry and other interested parties at that time. This will cover both the content of the specifications and the timetable for implementation.

Once responses to this initial consultation have been taken into account, there will be a further formal period of consultation on the draft regulations.

Copies of all consultation documents will be placed in the Library as soon as they are published.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 4, if he will list for each rail franchise the administered profit included within the support paid to British Rail prior to franchising. [4145]

Mr. Watts [holding answer 14 November 1996]: The amounts of administered profit are provided in the table.

Note:
[1]figures are for 1996–97 except for SWT and GW, where the figures are for 1995–96.

A total of £88 million operating profit was generated by the 13 franchised from operating companies whilst they were in BR ownership in 1995–96. This was some £16 million below the budgeted level of administered profits.

TREASURY

Retirement Pensioners

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons receiving the basic retirement pension (a) pay income tax over the standard rate, (b) pay income tax at the standard rate and (c) pay no income tax; and in each case what is the percentage of the total. [3045]

Mr. Jack: Available information for 1996–97 is given in the following table and relates to individuals above state retirement age.

	Number in millions		Percentage of total
Marginal tax rate	Individuals aged 65 or over	Women aged 60 to 64	Individuals aged 65 or over	Women aged 60 to 64

National Insurance

Ms Corston: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people currently paying income tax are estimated to pay more, and how many are estimated to pay less, than their national insurance contributions, including employers' contributions on their behalf. [3053]

Mr. Jack: Estimates for 1996–97 are as follows:

Individuals paying income tax who:	Number in millions
Pay more tax than national insurance contributions[1]	10.7
Pay less tax than national insurance contributions[1]	10.1
Pay tax but do not pay national insurance contributions[1]	4.8
Total	25.6

[1]Includes both employee contributions and the corresponding employers' contributions. The estimates are based on information projected from the 1994–95 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount spent by local government in (a) 1979 and (b) 1990. [3104]

Mr. Waldegrave: In the financial year 1979–80, the total amount spent by local government, by national accounts definitions, was £26 billion. In the financial year 1990–91 the total amount spent by local government, by national accounts definitions, was £69 billion.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much funding for local government was provided by central Government for the current year; and what are the equivalent figures for the last year for which figures are available. [3105]

Mr. Waldegrave: For the financial year 1996–97, planned total central Government grants to local authorities in the United Kingdom totalled £62,060 million. For the financial year 1995–96 total central Government grants to local authorities in the Untied Kingdom were estimated at £61,979 million.

Taxation (Self-assessment)

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tests the Inland Revenue has made of its computer systems relating to the self-assessment of taxation; and if the results were successful. [3257]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: EDS, the Inland Revenue's strategic partner, has worked with the Inland Revenue jointly to plan full testing of the computer system to support self-assessment. These tests included component, system, framework, integration and inter-system testing. They were supported by a full rehearsal of the system in local Inland Revenue offices during September. The system has been made available progressively from 4 November, since when it has been successfully available to local offices each day.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the extra (a) letters and (b) telephone calls the Inland Revenue is likely to receive as a result of the introduction of self-assessment. [3261]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The first self-assessment tax returns will be issued in April 1997. In the period to 31 March 1998 the Inland Revenue has planned to cope with up to 1.1 million letters and up to 11 million telephone calls which it expects to receive in relation to self-assessment.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost of new computer systems at the Inland Revenue to administer the self-assessment of taxation. [3258]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The computer system for self-assessment is being developed and implemented by EDS, the Inland Revenue's information technology partner. So far, the Inland Revenue has paid approximately £200 million for this service.

European Union Membership (Cost)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the net cost to the United Kingdom of membership of the European Union. [4093]

Mr. Oppenheim: Between joining the European Community in 1973 and the end of financial year 1995–96, the total United Kingdom public sector net contribution to the European Community Budget was £26.5 billion.

Spreadable Butter

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he was informed by the EC that New Zealand spreadable butter was not classified as butter. [4368]

Mr. Oppenheim: The head of the Agriculture Directorate General to the European Commission ruled in letter dated 27 June 1996 addressed to the Director of the European Court of Auditors that New Zealand spreadable butter did not meet the qualifying criteria for admission into the European Community at the reduced rate of customs duty. This correspondence was forwarded to HM Customs and Excise on 3 July 1996.

European Monetary Union

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the implementation of the stability pact which is proposed for stage III of EMU will require an amendment to the treaty of European union. [4394]

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposed stability pact aims to spell out practical procedures for implementation of the excessive deficits procedure in article 104c of the Maastricht treaty. One element of the pact is a draft regulation based on article 104c(14) second subparagraph. Otherwise, no amendment or change to the provisions of the treaty is envisaged or required for the implementation of the pact.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what requirements in respect of a gross domestic product ceiling on member states' general Government debt are proposed for inclusion in the stability pact for EMU. [4393]

Mr. Clarke: The Commission's proposals for a stability pact were submitted to Parliament on 22 October 1996 and I submitted an explanatory memorandum on 31 October. The proposed stability pact aims to reinforce the operation of the excessive deficits procedure in article 104c of the Maastricht treaty. It does not aim to change the reference value for debt which is specified in protocol No.5 of the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals in respect of budget disciplines have been made for (a) countries in monetary union and (b) countries outside the monetary union by (i) the European Commission and (ii) the German Government. [4367]

Mr. Clarke: The Commission's proposals for a stability pact were published on 16 October 1996 and submitted to Parliament on 22 October. I submitted an explanatory memorandum on 31 October. The idea of a stability pact has been under discussion since the German Government first proposed clarifying existing provisions in article 104c of the Maastricht treaty in November 1995. Proposals in the stability pact on fiscal discipline would affect only member states which participate in the single currency.

Energy-saving Materials (VAT)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the annual revenue cost to the Exchequer of reducing the rate of value added tax from 17.5 per cent. to 8 per cent. on energy-saving materials, manufactured for the purpose of (a) cavity wall insulation, (b) loft insulation, (c) underfloor insulation, (d) insulating hot water tanks, (e) insulating pipes and other plumbing fittings, (f) draught proofing, (g) controlling domestic heating systems, (h) external and internal wall cladding and (i) providing low emissivity glazing; and if he will make a statement. [4270]

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is not available. The cost of reducing VAT on these products has been estimated by the Association for the Conservation of Energy a trade lobby group, at £10 million in a full year.

Personal Tax Allowance

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the cost in excess of indexation of raising the personal tax allowance to £4,000 per annum and (b) the number of employees who would be taken out of the PAYE system, in addition to those who would be exempted by indexation. [4468]

Mr. Jack [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The full year cost in 1997–98, after allowing for statutory indexation, of increasing the non-age personal allowance to £4,000 and increasing the age allowances by an equivalent amount would be about £980 million. This would take about 350,000 people out of income tax including employees, self-employed people and pensioners, compared with statutory indexation.

VAT Overpayments

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost of extending the allowable period for the reclaim of overpaid value added tax to (a) four years, (b) five years and (c) six years; and if he will make a statement. [4742]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 19 November 1996]: Because, by its nature, overpaid value added tax is an unknown quantity until it is discovered and reclaimed, it is not possible to make reliable estimates.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Confederation of British Industry on the Government's plans to restrict the time period for reclaiming overpaid value added tax to three years while retaining the ability of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise to claim VAT underpaid over a six-year time period; what assessment he has made of the effects of such a policy on small and medium businesses; and if he will make a statement. [4741]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 19 November 1996]: The CBI has made representations in writing and in the forum of the joint VAT consultative committee. Representatives of Customs and Excise and the Treasury also attended a special meeting organised by the CBI at which businesses were able to discuss their concerns about the proposed time limit on recovery of overpaid tax. I have taken careful note of the points raised and the impact of the proposal on all sectors of business.

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what meetings there have been within the last two months between the head of the international and supply division of the VAT policy directorate of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the European Commission, represented by the head of the VAT unit of DGXXI; if he will publish the minutes of these meetings; what advice was given by the Commission's representative to the United Kingdom Government on the subject of the time limits applying to the reclaiming of VAT for (a) taxpayers and (b) Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and if he will make a statement. [4743]

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 19 November 1996]: The head of the international and supply division of the VAT policy directorate of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise and the head of the VAT unit of DGXXI have met on several occasions in the last two months, most recently on 4 and 5 November. No formal minutes have been produced and the content of such bilateral discussions, which covered a range of issues, is regarded as confidential.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) his agencies. [5074]

Mr. Jack: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity Distribution Losses

Sir John Hannam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the level of losses of electricity in the distribution system; and what variance there is between the regional companies. [4267]

Mr. Page: The level of losses for the regional electricity companies as a whole was 6.6 per cent. in 1995–96. There is regional variation which is caused by various factors including the physical aspects of each company's area. Individual companies' figures are commercially confidential, but range from just under 5 per cent. to nearly 9 per cent.

Working Time Directive

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make arrangements to publish the report of Professor Harrington relating to the working time directive. [4764]

Mr. Lang: As indicated in the reply by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State for Employment to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms Quin) on 11 May 1994, Official Report, column 168, the report could be published only after the case in the European Court of Justice had been concluded. Accordingly, I have now arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Negligence

Mr. Waller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to prevent companies charged with negligence resulting in a fatality from going into liquidation in order to avoid standing trial. [4794]

Mr. John M. Taylor: Companies may be subject to criminal proceedings notwithstanding the fact that they have gone into liquidation. In cases of windng up by the court, leave of the court may be required to bring such proceedings, whilst in cases of voluntary winding up, although leave is not required the court has the power to restrain proceedings on the application of the liquidate. Accordingly, I have no plans to change the law in this area.

Timeshare (Scotland)

Mr. Stewart: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to apply the Misrepresentation Act 1967 to Scotland in respect of timeshares; and if he will make a statement. [5041]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have no plans to do so.

Oil Companies (Meetings)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what occasions since 1979 Ministers met representatives of Century Oil Company Ltd., and BHP Petroleum Ltd. in their official capacity; what issues were raised at such meetings; and which Ministers attended. [4295]

Mr. Page [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Neither my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade nor my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Energy have met representatives of Century Oil Company Ltd. or BHP Petroleum Ltd. in their present ministerial capacities. However, my right hon. and noble Friend has agreed to meet BHP Petroleum Ltd. on 29 November 1996.

I attended a reception on 9 May 1996 at the House of Commons to which I was invited by my right hon. Friend the Member for Conway (Sir W. Roberts) in conjunction with BHP Petroleum Ltd. This was a social engagement.

I understand that my predecessors met representatives of BHP Petroleum Ltd. on occasion to discuss matters of topical interest.

Patents (Human DNA Sequences)

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the number of patents for human DNA sequences issued by the European Patent Office indicating (a) the country of origin and (b) if the organisation applying for the patent was from the private or public sector. [4973]

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 19 November 1996]: The way patent information is recorded does not permit direct retrieval of the information requested. However, research indicates that the patents granted for human DNA sequences are made up as follows:

(a) The three main countries of origin are, in descending order, Japan, USA and Germany, with South Africa, Spain, UK, Israel and Australia following, again in descending order.

(b) Over 70 per cent. come from the private sector.

To complete a full analysis to answer the question would involve disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many patents for human DNA sequences have been issued by (a) the British Patent Office and (b) the European Patent Office. [4972]

Mr. Taylor [holding answer 19 November 1996]: The way information on granted patents is recorded does not permit retrieval of the information requested but, following research, I believe that the number of patents issued for human DNA sequences by the British Patent Office is between 10 and 20, while the number issued by the European Patent Office is between 70 and 130. A fuller analysis could be achieved only at disproportionate cost.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford North, of 7 November, Official Report, column 704, what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government or is planned to ensure the exclusion of imports of woven wool fabrics from stage two of the European Union's phasing out of the multi-fibre arrangement; if the matter is subject to qualified majority voting; when final decisions will be taken; and if he will make a further statement. [5043]

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November 1996]: A qualified majority of EU member states, including the United Kingdom, support a compromise proposal from the Irish presidency for stage 2 of the phasing out of the multi-fibre arrangement, which would exclude woven wool fabrics from liberalisation.

Radio Communications Agency

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the Radio Communications Agency. [4306]

Mr. Ian Taylor: I refer the hon. Member to the previous answers that my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade gave on 17 June 1996, Official Report, columns 320–21 and on 24 July 1996, Official Report, column 481. The White Paper "Spectrum Management into the 21st Century" and the agency revised framework document, both available in the Libraries of both Houses, clearly set out the position of the agency in the future. The situation has not changed since then and I am pleased to say that there has been a substantial and positive response to the White Paper.

Federal Republic of Yugoslavia

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give a breakdown by sector of (a) imports and (b) exports with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia since the lifting of sanctions in November 1995. [4775]

Mr. Nelson: The data are published monthly by HM Customs and Excise in Business Monitor MM20, "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom with countries outside the European Community (Extra–EC Trade)".

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on proposals to extend the terms of the European Union agricultural generalised system of preference scheme to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [4772]

Mr. Nelson: The European Commission is committed, under the terms of the new generalised system of preferences regulation for agricultural products, to bring forward a proposal to examine the application of the agricultural GSP arrangements that will apply from 1 January 1997 to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. No proposal has yet been received from the European Commission.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress has been made in the planning of a promotional event to encourage trade with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [4774]

Mr. Nelson: My Department has taken a number of initiatives to promote trade with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. Theses include organising a successful major trade promotion event in London in June which coincided with the visit of the Federal Minister of Trade. Over 160 business representatives were present; my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim), the then Parliamentary Under–Secretary of State in this Department, was the UK keynote speaker. Last month, in association with the London chamber of commerce and industry, my Department mounted trade promotion events to coincide with the visits to the UK of the British ambassador to Belgrade and a trade delegation from Montenegro led by the Montenegrin Prime Minister. Both events were well attended. The ambassador also spoke at a series of events outside London organised by my Department to strengthen UK–Federal Republic of Yugoslavia trade and commercial links. Other events are planned for the future to build on the momentum already generated; these include a trade mission to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia early in 1997.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans there are for the European Union to conclude a trade agreement with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; and if the trade conditions of the 1982 trade and co-operation agreement between the European Community and the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia will be extended to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. [4773]

Mr. Nelson: EU Foreign Ministers have agreed that trade and co-operation agreements can be concluded in due course with the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia and certain other countries in south-eastern Europe, subject to the fulfilment of political and economic conditions. The Commission is currently undertaking exploratory contacts with the countries concerned, including FRY.

The Commission has recently proposed to the Council that the trade preferences contained in the 1982 agreement, which have been operating since February 1992 following suspension in November 1991, should now be extended to cover FRY. This is welcomed by the Government.

Gas Cylinder Sales (Safety)

Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what measures he proposes to take to ensure that companies which sell gas cylinder bottles are held responsible for their safe return. [4271]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 15 November 1996]: There are voluntary arrangements, promoted by gas suppliers and by the Liquid Petroleum Gas Association and local authorities, to ensure the return of used liquid petroleum gas cylinders. I have no plans to introduce mandatory requirements.

SCOTLAND

Minimum Sentences

4. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the effects of his proposals to introduce minimum sentences in Scotland with particular reference to the safety of the public.[3462]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proposals in the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill for automatic life sentences for repeat sexual or violent offenders and for a minimum sentence of seven years for a third conviction for trafficking in class A drugs demonstrate our determination to provide the public with the protection they deserve.

Tourism

13. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the increase in the level of tourism in Scotland since (a) 1979 and (b) 1993. [3471]

Mr. Kynoch: Comparative figures are not available but, since 1984, total visitor expenditure has increased by 51 per cent.

Local Government Finance

14. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the level of local authority spending per head in Scotland relative to the level in English local authorities. [3472]

Mr. Kynoch: Planned local authority spending per head of population in the current year is 32 per cent. higher in Scotland than in England.

23. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss local government finance. [3481]

38. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the forthcoming revenue support grant settlement. [3496]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend and I met the convention on 8 November and a further meeting is planned for 17 January.

40. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what factors he takes into account when calculating housing capital allocations to local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [3498]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The distribution of available resources for council housing investment reflect an assessment of the relative housing need in each local authority area based on information which authorities provide on such factors as stock condition and homelessness. The allocations take account of the extent to which councils propose to address the national priority issues of condensation and dampness, below tolerable standard housing, homelessness and community care in their planned capital programmes, as well as the efficiency and effectiveness with which they utilise resources and work with Scottish Homes and other housing providers in meeting local needs. Account is also taken of the capacity of each authority to generate capital receipts, part of which can be used to support housing investment.

Beef Export Ban

15. Mrs Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made towards lifting the ban on the export of beef cattle from Scotland. [3473]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Good progress is being made towards fulfilling the Florence pre-conditions, including elimination of the backlog under the over-30-months scheme in Scotland where some 140,000 animals have been slaughtered.

Sentencing Policy

16. Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposals to make prisoners liable to serve the full terms of their sentences in Scotland. [3474]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill will ensure that sentences mean what they say. In future, prisoners will serve the full sentence of imprisonment pronounced by the court, subject to a small measure of early release—not exceeding 12 days every two months—depending on good behaviour in custody.

Hospital Trusts

17. Mr. Eric Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on proposed amalgamations of hospital trusts in Scotland. [3475]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no current plans to alter the boundaries or re-configure any of the existing NHS trusts in Scotland.

Private Finance Initiative

18. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what private finance initiative schemes he has approved since their inception. [3476]

Mr. Kynoch: Private finance initiative schemes with an initial capital value of £70.4 million have been approved by my right hon. Friend or have been taken forward by health service bodies under delegated authority. These projects include the Skye bridge, clinical waste disposal facilities for Lothian, Forth and Northern health boards, the Law hospital health information system and the Ferryfield elderly care facility in Edinburgh. The balance is made up of smaller contracts for care beds, medical analysis equipment and clinical waste disposal.

Health Boards

19. Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the chairmen of the health boards to discuss finance. [3477]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend and I meet chairmen of health boards regularly to discuss matters of current interest including finance.

Frail Elderly People

20. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has made of the number of frail elderly people in Scotland who will require NHS hospital beds in the year 2000. [3478]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The level of NHS bed provision and the organisation of community health and social services for the frail elderly are determined by continuous joint assessment of local needs involving health boards and local authorities.

The aim is to secure the most effective package of services both in hospital and in the community which meets current and future needs.

Crimes

21. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many crimes were committed in (a) 1979 and (b) the last year for which figures are available. [3479]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of crimes committed is not available. The number of crimes recorded by the police in Scotland was 346,680 in 1979 and 502,802 in 1995. The results of the Scottish crime survey, a household survey of people's experience of crime, indicate that, between 1981 and 1992 actual crimes increased by only 4 per cent. compared with a 52 per cent. increase in comparable recorded crime over the same period.

Secondary Schools (Expenditure)

22. Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent per pupil in secondary schools in Scotland in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what the figure was in 1978–79, at constant prices. [3480]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Current expenditure per secondary pupil in 1994–95 was £2,874. That is 37 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979.

Dangerous Criminals

24. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to produce measures to protect the public from dangerous criminals. [3482]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government are determined to protect the public from dangerous criminals. We have produced several new measures to achieve this in the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill, the most important of which is the automatic life sentence which will apply on conviction for a second serious sexual or violent offence.

Convicted Offenders (Early Release)

25. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his Department's proposals in respect of the automatic early release of convicted offenders. [3483]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We will abolish automatic early release in the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Bill. In future, early release of prisoners will be dependent on their behaviour in custody and will be limited to a maximum of 12 days every two months.

Devolution

26. Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the report prepared by the Confederation of British Industry in Scotland on the subject of devolution in Scotland. [3484]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I welcome the detailed consideration given by the CBI to this important debate. It is clear that the business community recognises the damage that would be done to the Scottish economy by tampering with the present constitutional arrangements.

Public Spending

27. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on public spending by central Government per capita in Scotland. [3485]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer my hon. Friend to the oral answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Shoreham (Mr. Stephen).

River Clyde (Pollution)

28. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the cost of cleaning up pollution in the River Clyde in the last six months. [3486]

Mr. Kynoch: No major pollution incidents affecting the River Clyde have been reported to the Scottish Office in the last six months.

The Scottish Environment Protection Agency does not hold comprehensive data on the cost of general clean-up of lower level pollution in specific rivers or catchments.

Cattle Cull

29. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with the BSE cull; and if he will make a statement. [3487]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The selective cull is on hold while the new scientific evidence is considered, but of course many animals will have been slaughtered under the over-30-months scheme which would have been identified under the selective cull.

Salmon Farming

30. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives from the Scottish Salmon Growers' Association to discuss the salmon farming industry in Scotland. [3488]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: I met a wide range of industry representatives at this year's Scottish fish farming conference on 2 October and have maintained regular contact with senior representatives of the industry since then.

Inward Investment

31. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investment from abroad has been attracted to Scotland over the last 12 months. [3489]

Mr. Kynoch: Our continuing success in attracting inward investment to Scotland includes announcements during the past 12 months by DuPont, Seiko, Simple Technology, Nikon, Shin Ho Tech, Appryl, Quintiles, Lite-On Technology Corporation, Allied Precision Company, Bermo, Rohr Incorporated, Smart Incorporated and Hyundai among many others.

36. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about inward investment in Scotland. [3494]

Mr. Kynoch: Inward investment in Scotland has been running at record levels over the past two years and this success is continuing. Firms like Hyundai, Chunghwa, Lite-On, Quintiles and Rohr recognise that locating in Scotland means locating in one of Europe's most competitive business locations.

Self-financing Regulatory Organisations

32. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review the powers of self-financing regulatory organisations in Scotland. [3490]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend is not aware of any bodies in Scotland for which he has responsibility which fit the description of self-financing regulatory organisations.

Knives (Assaults)

33. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many assaults with knives there have been in Scotland in each of the last five years. [3491]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the written answer that I gave him on 15 November 1996, Official Report, column 380.

New Community Hospital, Hawick

34. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects contracts to be awarded for construction on the proposed new community hospital for Hawick; and if he will make a statement. [3492]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The award of the contract for construction of the proposed new community hospital at Hawick is a matter for Borders Community Health Services NHS trust.

Maternity Care (Lanarkshire)

35. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning maternity care in Lanarkshire; and if he will make a statement. [3493]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have received written representations from the Royal College of Midwives and three others.

Lanarkshire health board's on-going public consultation on its proposals for the reprovision of maternity and related services will continue until 9 December 1996. No final decisions have yet been taken.

NHS Chairmen and Chief Executives

37. Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the (a) cost and (b) purpose of the recent two-day meeting between NHS chairmen and chief executives. [3495]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am not aware of such a meeting having been held.

Homelessness

39. Ms Roseanna Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received on levels of homelessness in Scotland. [3497]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Most recent representations on homelessness have been in connection with the consultation on a draft code of guidance on homelessness, to which just over 140 organisations and individuals responded.

SCOTLAND

Alcohol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 years have been diagnosed as alcoholics in Scotland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4412]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information required is not available centrally. However, information on hospitalisation for those patients aged under 18 and those 18 and over who have been discharged with an alcohol dependence syndrome[1] during the last five years is set out in the following table:

Year	<18	18+	Total
1991	31	3,535	3,566
1992	20	4,167	4,187
1993	13	4,609	4,622

[1] "Hospitalisations" refer to in-patient and day case discharges from non-obstetric/non-psychiatric NHS hospitals in Scotland. Out-patient attendances, accident and emergency attendances and general practitioner consultations are excluded from the table. Diagnoses are coded to the World Health Organisation's International Classification of Diseases 9th revision, ICD.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 have been prosecuted for alcohol-related crime in Scotland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4407]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not collected centrally on the number of prosecutions for alcohol-related crime. The available information is given in the table. Children under the age of 16 would usually be dealt with by the children's hearing system rather than the courts for such offences.

Number of persons aged under 18 proceeded against where the main offence related to the purchase, consumption or possession of alcohol

M77 Extension

Mr. Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the impact of the extension of the M77 on the economies of (a) Renfrewshire and (b) Ayrshire. [4262]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Scottish Office carried out the standard cost-benefit analysis of the M77 extension, which revealed that the proposal offered good value for money. In addition, Renfrewshire Enterprise and Enterprise Ayrshire have each prepared economic assessments of aspects of the project. The results of these assessments indicate that the development of the route offers real economic opportunities for neighbouring communities. The local enterprise companies will be looking to exploit those opportunities when the Drumbreck-Malletsheugh section of the M77 opens shortly.

Tayside Community Business

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the failure rate of firms funded with public money by Tayside Community Business; and if he will make a statement. [4281]

Mr. Kynoch: My right hon. Friend has received two representations about Tayside Community Business. The issues raised are under considerations at present and replies will be sent as soon as possible.

Electoral Divisions

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the (a) local authority and (b) new parliamentary constituency for each local authority electoral division. [4751]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4530]

Mr. Kynoch: The Scottish Office has a responsibility for most aspects of the environment in Scotland, which figures as an important consideration in a wide range of Scottish policies and programmes. In these areas, a variety of procedures and processes is used to ensure that decisions are reached giving full weight to the commitments made in the White Papers "Sustainable Development: The UK Strategy", Cm 2246, 1994, and the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200, 1990. It is a fundamental objective of the Government to secure a prosperous economy for Scotland, building on and having regard for its considerable natural resources and heritage.

Within its own estate, the Scottish Office has initiated an environmental auditing procedure in accordance with ISO 14001 accreditation criteria at its largest building, Victoria Quay, in Edinburgh.

Environmental management procedures piloted at Victoria Quay have refined existing work practices. Further development of waste management and energy efficiency policies will, collectively, result in an overall improvement in environmental performance across the estate, providing additional economic and social benefits, while maintaining staff welfare and comfort.

The efficiency and effectiveness of business in Scotland is assisted through environmental audit consultancy services such as the European Community econ-management and auditing scheme sponsored by the Department of the Environment and is promoted by Scottish Office staff through a regional network.

Promotion of the economic benefits to come from environmental auditing and related processes is a matter largely for the enterprise network of Scottish Enterprise, Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the local enterprise companies. For example, the Scottish Office has worked with Scottish Natural Heritage, a number of local enterprise companies and enterprise trusts and KPMG to sponsor the centre for environment and business in Scotland to produce a catalogue of case studies of good environmental management in companies of all types and sizes.

The environmental technology best practice programme run in partnership with the Department of Trade and Industry concentrates on waste minimisation and cost-effective cleaner technology providing services direct to business. The energy efficiency best practice programme, part of the Government effort to reduce carbon dioxide emissions, has enabled companies in Scotland, as elsewhere, to reduce their emissions while at the same time making substantial reductions in their energy costs. The Clyde waste minimisation project run by the Glasgow development agency with Dunbartonshire Enterprise, Renfrewshire Enterprise and Enterprise Ayrshire, is another example which has enabled a range of companies to reduce their costs while at the same time bringing benefits to the environment.

Police Complaints (Injuries)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have officially complained about injuries they have suffered allegedly at the hands of police officers in Scotland in the last two years. [4577]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of complaints of alleged assaults by police officers against members of the public which have been received by the police are as follows:

Year	Number of alleged assaults
1995	1,010
1996	612

Court Waiting Time

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what statistics his Department collates on the interval between a charge being made by the police and appearance in court by the accused for different offences in different parts of Scotland. [4725]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The statistics requested are not collated by the Scottish Office. It is not always necessary for the police to charge an accused before reporting that accused to the procurator fiscal for consideration for prosecution.

Police Custody (Deaths)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for those who have died in police custody in Scotland in the last two years (i) the location of their death, (ii) the reasons for the deaths ascertained so far, and (iii) what action was taken in respect of the police officer involved; and if he will make a statement. [4576]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the location of and reason for death in respect of persons who have died in police custody or otherwise with the police in Scotland since November 1994 is set out in the table. All such deaths are thoroughly investigated by an appointed senior police officer and reported to the procurator fiscal, who decides whether any criminal proceedings are warranted. In all cases where a person dies in legal custody, the Fatal Accidents and Sudden Deaths Inquiry (Scotland) Act 1976 requires a fatal accident inquiry to be held, in which all the circumstances surrounding the death are subject to examination.

Location of death	Reason for death
Kilmarnock police station	Acute fatty infiltration of liver. Toxic effects of alcohol.
Southern general hospital, Glasgow	Sub-dural haemorrhage.
Southern general hospital, Glasgow	Head injury.
Levenmouth police station, Methil	Head injuries. Probable alcohol-related fall.
Gorbals police station, Glasgow	Hanging.
Kilbirnie police station, Glasgow	Head injury with brain damage. Fractured skull.
Motherwell police station	Acute haemorrhagic pancreatitis. Chronic alcoholism.
Edinburgh royal infirmary	Fatal dose of dihydrocodeine in liver. Toxic dose of dihydrocodeine in blood.
Oban police station	Acute pulmonary congestion and oedema.
Dalkeith police station	Acute alcohol intoxication, hypertensive heart disease and coronary atheroma.
Motherwell police station	Pulmonary oedema and congestion.
Western general hospital, Edinburgh	Blunt force head injury; haemophilia.
Kirkcaldy police station	Hanging.
Hawick police station	Inhalation of gastric contents; acute intoxication with alcohol.
Aberdeen royal infirmary	Heart attack.
Southern general hospital, Glasgow	Head injury/fall.
The Victoria infirmary, Glasgow	Hanging.
Aberdeen royal infirmary	Myocardial infarction (heart attack).
Southern general hospital, Glasgow	Head injury.
Inverclyde royal hospital, Greenock	Head injury/fall.
Glasgow royal infirmary	Pulmonary oedema and congestion.
Edinburgh royal infirmary	Undetermined, pending further laboratory investigations.
Foresterhill hospital, Aberdeen	Ischaemic heart disease.
Glasgow royal infirmary	Not yet known.

Housing Associations

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to encourage transfer of local authority housing stock to housing associations. [3718]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: Earlier this year, the Scottish Office issued draft guidance on housing stock transfers to local authorities and other interested parties for comments. The comments received are currently being considered and the final guidance will be issued shortly.

Over the summer, in meetings with housing conveners of Scottish local authorities, I encouraged them to examine the benefits that housing transfers can offer. Scottish Office officials have also been available to discuss the implications of stock transfer with individual authorities.

In addition, a working group has been set up to look at the regulation and monitoring of new social landlords, such as local housing companies. The group, which comprises representatives from Scottish Homes, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, the Scottish Federation of Housing Associations, the Chartered Institute of Housing in Scotland and funders, is due to hold its first meeting in early December.

Education Buildings

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much capital expenditure local authorities have been permitted to make on education buildings in Scotland (a) in real and (b) constant prices; and how much has been spent in (i) real and (ii) constant prices in each year since 1979. [4443]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: The information requested is given in the tables.

1. Within the total capital allocations made to authorities, allocations applying to specific programmes are advisory and do not restrict to that figure.

2. The total allocations for educational building include elements for further education from 1979–80 to 1992–93, and community education from 1985–86 onwards.

3. These figures include supplementary allocations where appropriate.

4. As from 1996–97 authorities are given a single allocation covering all their non-housing capital programmes. An advisory for educational building is not separately identified.

1. Compiled from local authority financial returns.

2. The figures include expenditure on further education from 1979–80 to 1992–93, and community education from 1985–86.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what assessment he has made of the number of schools in a seriously sub-standard condition in Scotland and of the amount of money needed to repair them; [4444]

(2) what research he has conducted into the physical condition of schools in Scotland; and what conclusions were reached; [4448]

(3) how many replacement schools are currently being constructed in Scotland; and where. [4449]

Mr. Robertson: The overall management of school buildings is a matter for individual education authorities. Detailed information on the physical condition of schools, or on the progress of individual school building projects, is not held centrally.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent on school buildings in Scotland under the private finance initiative. [4445]

Mr. Robertson: There has been no such expenditure to date.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which school building projects in Scotland are currently being considered for financing through the private finance initiative. [4446]

Mr. Robertson: My right hon. Friend is aware that the following authorities are actively considering the following school building projects through the private finance initiative.

Falkirk council: refurbishment of Bo'ness academy; refurbishment of a group of schools including Graeme, Woodlands and Larbert high schools;

Stirling council: replacement of Balfron high school;

Aberdeenshire council: construction of new Garioch academy;

East Renfrewshire council: the extension of St. Ninian's high school; construction of new primary school in Newton Mearns.

However, he does not collect systematically information from local authorities about school building projects which they may be exploring under the private finance initiative. Authorities are likely therefore to have a number of other projects at earlier stages of consideration.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from (a) the finance industry and (b) the construction industry about the usefulness of the private finance initiative for school building; and what those representations were. [4447]

Mr. Robertson: Scottish Office Ministers have had frequent contacts with members of the construction and financial services industries concerning progress with the private finance initiative since its launch in 1992. We welcome constructive ideas from the private sector and encourage local authorities to explore the option of the initiative for suitable projects in all areas of public service for which they have responsibility.

South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what stage the recruitment process for the chief executive of the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust has now reached; how much has been spent on this exercise by the trust; which outside agencies have been appointed to assist in the recruitment process; and when an appointment will be made. [5052]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The closing date for applications was 15 November 1996. The only costs have been in advertising the post. No agencies have been appointed by the trust to assist in the recruitment process. The trust expects that an appointment will be made by the latter part of December 1996.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to suspend the recruitment of the chief executive of the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust pending a review of the provision of acute medical services by NHS trusts in Ayrshire. [5053]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. The recruitment process is a matter for the trust.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland who is currently carrying out the duties of the chief executive of the South Ayrshire Hospitals NHS trust. [5055]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Mr. Lindsay C. Tolland is the current acting chief executive.

Acute Medical Services (Ayrshire)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to carry out a review of the current provision of acute medical services within the Ayrshire and Arran health board area with a view to the creation of a single acute NHS trust for Ayrshire. [5054]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have no plans to do so. The organisation of health provision is a matter for the health board and the NHS trusts to agree in accordance with their shared assessment of health needs for the area.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place between the Scottish Office, the Ayrshire and Arran health board and the South and North Ayrshire NHS trusts relating to the amalgamation of the existing acute NHS trusts to provide a single acute service NHS trust for Ayrshire and Arran. [5050]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There have been no such discussions.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Scottish Office has received in the last three years in respect of the creation of a single acute NHS trust for the Ayrshire and Arran area. [5051]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only written representations received were from the hon. Member on 27 July and 3 September 1994. The hon. Member also raised the matter during the Scottish Grand Committee debate in Ayr on 10 June 1996.

Kilwinning Plant Closure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what types of financial assistance have been given to (a) Robert Wilson and Sons Ltd., (b) Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group Ltd. and (c) their subsidiary companies by his Department during the last five years. [5046]

Mr. George Kynoch: None. An offer of regional selective assistance was made to Robert Wilson and Sons (Est. 1849) Ltd. in March 1995 to assist the installation of new machinery to improve produce quality and to help the company to develop into new markets; however, none of this grant has been claimed.

HEALTH

Edgware General Hospital

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the running costs of the minor accident treatment service unit at Edgware general hospital. [3906]

Mr. Malone: The running costs of the minor accident treatment service at Edgware general hospital include overhead costs shared with the accident and emergency department. It is therefore not possible to disaggregate the accurate full costs of the present minor accident treatment service facility.

Dentists (Sunderland)

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) general dental practitioners and (b) community dental practitioners practise dentistry in Sunderland health authority's area. [4417]

Mr. Malone: The information is contained in the table:

General dental service and community dental service: number of general dental practitioners[1 2 3] at 30 June 1996 and community dentists[4] at 30 September 1995 in Sunderland health authority

Number of general dental practitioners[1 2 3] at 30 June 1996	Number of community dentists[4 5] whole-time equivalent, at 30 September 1995
88	10

[1] The number of dentists (principals) on the health authority list and their assistants and vocational trainees.
[2] Some dentists have a contract with more than one health authority. All dentists in Sunderland are included.
[3] Excludes hospital dentists.
[4] Figure for community dentists is whole time equivalent and represents the number of staff allocated by Sunderland health commission, priority Healthcare Wearside NHS trust and City Hospitals Sunderland NHS trust.
[5] Figure is rounded to the nearest 10.

Mental Illness

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of a recent report by the World Health Organisation into the extent of mental illness; and if he will make a statement. [4754]

Mr. Burns: I welcome "Mental Illness in General Health Care", edited by T. B. Üstün and N. Sartorious. It is a very useful contribution to our understanding of the importance of primary health care in the development of mental health services. We are already taking a number of steps to improve the ability of general practitioners to understand, diagnose and manage mental illness.

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount allocated for HIV treatment in each NHS trust. [4716]

Mr. Horam: National Health Service trusts receive no central funding for HIV treatment. Funding for HIV treatment, together with all other income, is included in contracts with purchasers.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4526]

Mr. Horam: Internally, the Department operates an effective energy and environment action plan which promotes all aspects of green housekeeping and which is regularly reviewed. Additionally, major energy audits of three of the main London buildings were recently undertaken and the majority of recommendations have already been implemented. Externally, contractors for building and office services are required to demonstrate their own environmental policies when invited to tender and their environmental performance is included in our assessment of their tenders.

Guidance to the national health service encourages it to engage in pro-environmental measures and to ensure that the environment is given thorough consideration in the development of policies at all levels. For example the NHS's old inefficient incinerators have been closed down and replaced with fewer, modern installations which fully comply with the Environmental Protection Act 1990. As part of the target to reduce energy consumption and stabilise carbon dioxide emissions, the NHS has introduced some 200 combined heat and power installations to make more efficient use of fossil fuel, and one of these provided this Department's case study example in response to the United Kingdom round table on sustainable development.

In 1996, NHS Estates—an executive agency of the Department of Health—introduced an award for the "best environmental initiative" in its health care estate management awards.

Fostering and Adoption

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to introduce legislation on fostering and adoption in the current Session. [4511]

Mr. Burns: The Government will introduce adoption legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows. There are no plans to revise fostering legislation at this time.

Prescriptions

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the (i) percentage and (ii) amount of the NHS prescription charge received on each prescription by pharmacists in (a) 1979, (b) 1984, (c) 1987, (d) 1992 and (e) 1996. [4506]

Mr. Malone: The available information is shown in the table.

Year	Average prescription charge as a percentage of average total cost per prescription	Average total cost per prescription £	Average prescription charge during the year (see note 2) £
1979	13	2.43	0.31
1984	35	4.39	1.55
1987	43	5.46	2.35
1992	48	7.60	3.66
1995	60	8.57	5.13

[1] The data used are obtained from the Prescription Pricing Authority PD1 series of forms and cover all prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors in England. The number of prescriptions are based on fees.

[2] The prescription charges used to obtain the average prescription charge during each year was as follows:
1979 : 1 January to 15 July—£0.20, 16 July to 31 December—£0.45; 1984 : 1 January to 31 March—£1.40, 1 April to 31 December—£1.60; 1987 : 1 January to 31 March—£2.20, 1 April to 31 December—£2.40; 1992 : 1 January to 31 March—£3.40, 1 April to 31 December—£3.75; 1995 : 1 January to 31 March—£4.75, 1 April to 31 December—£5.25.

[3] Information for 1996 is not yet available.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of all NHS prescriptions issued in Sheffield in the last 12 months for which figures are available were free of charge; and if he will make a statement. [4832]

Mr. Malone: In the area covered by the Sheffield family health services authority, 85 per cent. of prescription items were dispensed free of charge to patients in 1995.

Miss Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has for the future of resale price maintenance for prescription medicines. [4505]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I have been asked to reply.

Resale price maintenance is unlawful under the Resale Prices Act 1976, subject to the possibility of exemption by the restrictive practices court on public interest grounds. The Director General of Fair Trading announced on 18 October that he was seeking leave of the court to apply for a discharge of its 1970 order in respect of resale price maintenance on ethical and proprietary medicines. If leave is given, it will be for the court to decide whether the 1970 order remains in the public interest. The Secretary of State has no statutory role or discretion in relation to the director-general's application or in relation to the court's consideration of the case.

Limb Lane Secure Unit

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Limb Lane secure unit in Sheffield. [4830]

Mr. Burns: The Limb Lane unit is a new eight-place secure unit for children. It is being constructed by Sheffield city council and funded by a grant from the Department of Health. It is part of the national secure accommodation development programme, which will provide an additional 170 places by the middle of next year. The unit is expected to be completed early in the new year.

Water Disconnection

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will collate centrally information on families that have contracted a disease due to their supply of domestic water being cut off; and if he will make a statement. [5142]

Mr. Horam: This information is not available centrally.

Paediatric Intensive Care Beds

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra (a) general and specialist paediatric intensive care beds and (b) high dependency beds are to be provided this year; and if he will list their locations. [4805]

Mr. Horam: The chief executive of the national health service executive reported earlier this year on plans to increase the provision of beds for critically ill children and gave their location by region. Copies of this report, "Paediatric Intensive Care", which was published on 29 May, are in the Library. Most of these additional beds are scheduled to open this year; many are now available and the others will open shortly.

Learning Disabilities

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total resource allocation for learning disabilities and its percentage of the local budget in each of the last five years. [4807]

Mr. Burns: There is no specific allocation for services for people with learning disabilities. Health authorities are given general allocations for hospital and community health services to purchase health care services for their resident population.

Homicides and Suicides (Inquiries)

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many confidential inquiries into homicides and suicides have been undertaken in each of the last five years; and what plans he has to publish an analysis of the results of these inquiries. [4808]

Mr. Burns: The confidential inquiry into homicides and suicides by mentally ill people was set up in 1991, funded by the Department and undertaken by the Royal College of Psychiatrists. Two reports have been published: "A Preliminary Report on Homicides", in August 1994, analysed 22 cases of homicides; and the "Report of the Confidential Inquiry into Homicides and Suicides by Mentally Ill People", in January 1996, analysed 39 cases of homicide and 240 cases of suicide. Both these reports are available in the Library.

Registered Homes

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many accidents have taken place in homes registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984, broken down by category of home in each of the last five years. [4810]

Mr. Burns: The information requested is not available centrally.

District Health Authorities

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 March 1996, Official Report, column 774, concerning capitation formula, what was the date of the latest revision of the formula; what changes were made; and when it came into force. [5072]

Mr. Horam: A major review of the national weighted capitation formula took place in 1994. As a result, new adjustments for need and cost were introduced in 1995–96 for allocations to regional health authorities. The revised formula was used to inform allocations to health authorities in 1996–97.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 337, what information is collected centrally on commitments entered into by NHS trusts arising from private finance initiative projects; and to what extent this information includes data on long-term revenue commitments arising from such projects. [5090]

Mr. Horam: Information including trust name, scheme description, capital value of scheme and status of the project is collected centrally on private finance initiative projects with a capital value of £1 million or over that have been approved since November 1992. Estimates on long-term revenue commitments arising from the private finance initiative for each individual trust are not collected centrally.

SOCIAL SECURITY

National Insurance

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the combined national insurance contribution income from employers and employees and (b) expenditure on the basic retirement pension and on all benefits, at present contribution rates and levels of benefit, for the years (i) 2000–01, (ii) 2010–11, (iii) 2020–21, (iv) 2030–31 and (v) 1995–96, if the Government Actuary's assumptions for later years are applied to that year and separately identifying for each set of figures (1) health service charges, (2) occupational pension rebates, (3) personal pension rebates and (4) personal pension subsidies. [5306]

Mr. Heald: The information requested is in the table:

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from the Benefits Agency and trade unions about staffing levels and resources in the introduction of the jobseeker's allowance. [4515]

Mr. Roger Evans: None.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what analysis he has undertaken of the impact of the jobseeker's allowance on young widows on benefit; and if he will make a statement. [4575]

Mr. Evans: We have in place a long-term programme of monitoring and evaluation of jobseeker's allowance.

Widows who wish to claim jobseeker's allowance are required to be available for employment. However, a widow whose youngest child is below the age of 16 may claim income support without being available for employment.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the case of Mr. Ron Fisher of Gulston road, Coventry, and the jobseeker's allowance. [4563]

Mr. Evans: The administration of income support is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 19 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will review the case of Ron Fisher of Gulstan Road, Coventry, and the jobseeker's allowance.

In the interests of confidentiality I have written to you separately about Mr. Fisher's claim to Job Seekers Allowance. I have outlined the background to Mr. Fisher's claim and the action taken by both the Benefits Agency Office and Employment Service Jobcentre.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about liaison between jobcentres and his Department over the jobseeker's allowance. [4564]

Mr. Evans: The administration of the payment of the jobseeker's allowance is a matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Jim Cunningham, dated 19 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if he will make a statement about liaison between job centres and his Department over the Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA).

JSA was introduced on the 7 October and is delivered jointly by the Benefits Agency (BA) and Employment Service (ES).

JSA and other relevant services for Jobseekers are being provided from Jobcentres, the majority of which now have BA staff working in them. Day to day liaison between BA and ES is the responsibility of local managers and staff and is working effectively. These local arrangements are supported by formal joint management structures at District, Area and National level and a Memorandum of Understanding between the two Agency Chief Executives.

Between formal meetings, managers and staff from the two agencies work together on a daily basis to ensure the smooth delivery of JSA.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Building Societies

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his oral answer of 12 November Official Report, column 144, if he will list the representatives of the building societies the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People met on 13 November, indicating the building societies to which they belong. [4762]

Mr. Burt: I met the director general and other members of staff of the Building Societies Association. The association represents buildings societies in general.

Single Parents

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 7 November, what factors underlay the scale of increases in the total sums spent on benefit for single parents. [4761]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: Expenditure on lone parent benefits rose from £1.8 billion in 1978–79 to £9.5 billion in 1995–96—1995–96 prices. The most significant factor underlying the scale of this increase is the growth of lone parenthood in the general population, and in particular the growth of single, never married lone parents, who are less likely to be in work or receiving maintenance, and therefore more likely to be dependent on income support.

National Disability Council

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to the oral answer by the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) of 12 November Official Report, column 143–44, if he will list the issues on which the National Disability Council has offered advice to Ministers on its own initiative; if he will list the dates on which such advice was offered; and if he will indicate in which cases Ministers (a) accepted and (b) rejected such advice. [4763]

Mr. Burt: The Government have regular contact with the National Disability Council. The council has given advice on a wide range of issues relevant to the reduction and elimination of discrimination against disabled people. The Disability Discrimination Act 1995 requires the National Disability Council to provide the Secretary of State with an annual report which he must lay before Parliament and arrange for further publication as he considers appropriate. The annual report for 1995–96 was published on 9 July 1996. Copies were placed in the Library. It records, among other things, advice the council has given during the previous financial year. The council is required to produce a similar report as soon as is practicable after the current financial year.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what proportion of applications for disability living allowance or for an upgrade to higher rate disability living allowance an adverse decision is given without the adjudication officer seeking information from the claimant's general practitioner or hospital consultant. [4846]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The information is not available in the format requested; the available information is given below.

A claimant is invited to provide supporting statements with his claim, for example from a GP, carer or social worker. Information from such sources may also be requested by an adjudication officer who may further ask for an examining medical practitioner's report. Information is sought from the most suitable source, and this may not be a GP or hospital consultant if, for example, the claimant has not recently attended for treatment.

[5] An adverse decision is one where either a previous refusal has been upheld, or where the benefit was previously awarded and the decision is not to increase the level of the award.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5077]

Mr. Burt: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from PFI contracts. Such information is now being collated. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed PFI contracts would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Child Support Agency

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what assessment he has made of the steps taken by the Child Support Agency to secure liability orders within a reasonable time on parents who consistently avoid providing maintenance for their children; [4123]

(2) how many complaints the Child Support Agency has received in the last year about fathers who successfully avoid making any payment due to the mothers of their children, whose cases have been registered by the Child Support Agency. [4125]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Sir Dudley Smith, dated 19 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about liability orders and complaints to the Agency about fathers who avoid paying their maintenance.

The Agency makes every effort to ensure that absent parents meet their maintenance liability, and takes various forms of enforcement action where this does not happen.

You have specifically asked about liability orders which are applied for through the courts, mainly against non-compliant self employed absent parents. In the period from 1 April 1996 to 30 September 1996 the number of liability orders the Agency applied for was 1,082; this is an increase of 55% on the same period last year.

Each such case is considered on its merits. Legal action against an absent parent is a serious step and is not taken lightly. Nevertheless, if all other voluntary methods fails and if a deduction from earnings order is not a possibility, then a liability order is applied for. Additionally, since May of this year the Agency has been able to enter liability orders as debts in the County Court Register of Judgments, which may in turn affect credit availability for the absent parent concerned.

I am afraid I cannot give you an answer to your question about the number of complaints against fathers who do not comply with child support liability. There is no business need for us to categories complaints along the lines that you describe. For example, whether they are about one or other party to child maintenance or by gender within that category.

I hope this is helpful.

Court Orders (Avoidance)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidelines he issues to police forces in respect of obtaining evidence about anyone who consistently avoids their responsibilities under court and official orders by constantly changing their address. [4128]

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

None. This is an operational matter for individual chief officers of police.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Students

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what research he has (a) conducted and (b) evaluated about the costs faced by Northern Ireland students who study in Great Britain because of a lack of higher education places in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [3582]

Mr. Ancram: None.

Unemployment

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have experienced at least one period of unemployment since 1979. [3936]

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is available only from October 1993. In the three-year period to October 1996, 196,787 people have made at least one new claim for unemployment-related benefit.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the unemployment figures on the basis of the current statistical definition in each of the last 10 years in Northern Ireland. [3944]

Mr. Ancram: The unemployment figures on the basis of the current statistical definition in each of the last 10 years in Northern Ireland were as follows:

Year	Annual average figure	Percentage of the work force
1987	120,400	16.4
1988	111,100	15.0
1989	103,300	14.0

1991	99,100	12.9
1992	104,700	13.8
1993	103,700	13.7
1994	97,100	12.6
1995	88,100	11.4
1996[1]	85,800	11.1

[1] January to October.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the population of working age in Northern Ireland were unemployed in each year since 1979. [3945]

Mr. Ancram: The information, which is available on a consistent only basis from 1984, is as follows:

	Percentage working age population unemployed (ILO definition)
Spring
1984	12.1
1985	11.7
1986	11.6
1987	11.0

Carrowdore Village

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what residential developments have been approved for Carrowdore village; how many homes are planned for each development; what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the footways to support these developments; what proposals there are to provide increased accommodation at Carrowdore primary school; and if he will make a statement about the future growth of Carrowdore village. [3909]

Mr. Ancram: The South–Eastern education and library board has no plans to provide additional accommodation at Carrowdore primary school.

Responsibility for the planning matters raised have been delegated to the Planning Service under its chief executive, Mr. T. W. Stewart. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given to these points.

Letter from T. W. Stewart to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 18 November 1996:

Mr. Moss has asked me to reply to your recent question about the future development of Carrowdore Village.

In the last 9 years, a total of 7 residential developments, comprising 121 new houses, have been approved within the development limited of Carrowdore village as follows:

Location	Units	Date approved
Church Walk	10	23 June 1987
Main Street	22	18 January 1988
Manse Road	22	4 April 1990
New Road	13	9 April 1991
Castle Place	5	22 April 1992
Church Road	7	14 September 1995
Main Street	42	13 February 1996

A monitoring survey carried out in July of this year indicated that to date, 47 of these houses have been built. The adequacy of the footways to support these developments was taken into account in determining the planning applications for these proposals.

The North Down and Ards Area Plan 1984–1995, which remains the statutory development plan for the area, identifies a development limit for Carrowdore village. Within that development limit, there is scope for further housing other than for that for which planning approval has already been granted. The future growth of the village will be considered when the Area Plan is reviewed.

Mr. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) when Main street in Carrowdore village was last resurfaced; when it is proposed next to resurface the street; and if he will make a statement; [3911]

(2) what proposals he has to provide a footway from the Manse Court junction with Ballyblack road east to the existing footway at Main street, Carrowdore; and if he will make a statement. [3910]

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Roads Service under its chief executive, Mr. G. P. Fraser. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from G. P. Fraser to Mr. John D. Taylor, dated 15 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked the Chief Executive to reply to your questions about the resurfacing of Main Street, Carrowdore and the provision of a footway from the Manse Court junction with Ballyblack Road to the existing footway at Main Street, Carrowdore. In his absence I am replying on his behalf.

We have no records to indicate the last time Main Street, Carrowdore was resurfaced and can only confirm that it was prior to 1973. Roads Service intends to surface dress the carriageway next summer following the completion of Water Service work in the area.

We have no proposals to construct a footway at the location in question.

Job Creation

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many jobs have been created in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [3938]

Mr. Ancram: The creation of jobs over the past 10 years is demonstrated by the rise in the number in employment. The position for each of the last 10 years is set out in the table:

Northern Ireland civil employment at June of each year

Year	Employers in employment	Self employed	Civil employed	Change in civil employed over year
1986	501,400	75,700	577,100	—
1987	504,100	83,200	587,300	+10,200
1988	517,200	87,000	604,200	+16,900
1989	525,600	85,100	611,700	+7,600
1990	533,200	90,300	628,500	+16,700
1991	542,100	92,200	634,300	+5,800
1992	543,600	83,300	626,900	–7,400
1993	545,400	80,700	627,100	+200
1994	557,800	82,200	640,000	+12,900
1995	573,000	82,800	655,800	+15,800
1996	573,100	82,800	655,900	+100

Figures rounded to the nearest 100 and may not sum due to rounding. Self-employed estimates for 1996 are currently not available. In accordance with practice the estimate is held constant at the level of the previous year.

Low Pay

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland currently earn less than £2.50 per hour. [3937]

Mr. Ancram: Information on hourly earnings in Northern Ireland is available from the "New Earnings Survey" and relates to the proportion of employees within the earnings band specified. The latest figures available are for April 1995 when 0.9 per cent. of full-time male employees and 1.3 per cent. of full-time female employees earned less than £2.50 per hour.
Source: New Earnings Survey, April 1995.

Benefits Expenditure

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the expenditure on benefits paid in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [3943]

Mr. Moss: The information requested is given in the table.

Year	Benefit spend (£ million)
1985–86	1,230.7
1986–87	1,335.5
1987–88	1,403.6
1988–89	1,465.6
1989–90	1,557.1
1990–91	1,707.7
1991–92	1,951.1
1992–93	2,211.5
1993–94	2,469.7
1994–95	2,648.2
1995–96[1]	2,833.1

[1] Estimated figures.

Alcohol

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 years have been diagnosed as alcoholics in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4410]

Mr. Moss: The information available is given in the table. The Department of Health and Social Services intends next year to commission a review of its strategy on alcohol misuse.

The number of in-patients discharged at least once from Northern Ireland mental illness hospitals and psychiatric units with a primary diagnosis of alcohol dependence syndrome is shown in the table:

In-patients diagnosed	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
All ages	856	922	921
Aged under 18	2	5	1

Figures are based on code 303 of the 9th revision of the International Classification of Diseases, alcohol dependence syndrome.

Anti-social Tenants

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to review the Northern Ireland Housing Executive allocation policy to ensure that anti-social tenants can be transferred to new accommodation under a negative points system. [4458]

Mr. Moss: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, and the chief executive has advised me that the transfer of any tenant, including those deemed guilty of anti-social behaviour, is governed by the executive's transfer policy and not its allocation policy. The executive has no powers compulsorily to transfer a secure tenant. A transfer takes place on the basis of a request from, and agreement with, an individual tenant. There are no plans to change this policy.

In cases where tenants are deemed guilty of anti-social behaviour, the executive, under the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1983, has powers through the courts, to seek repossession of its property. However, before taking such action, the executive will invoke its neighbourhood complaints procedure in an attempt to settle any disputes. For the future, it is envisaged that a draft Northern Ireland Housing Order 1997 will contain provisions strengthening the grounds for repossession where a tenant is guilty of anti-social behaviour, and provide for injunctions, backed by a power of arrest, to be granted in such cases. These provisions are similar to those contained in the Housing Act 1996.

District Council Client Officers

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the district councils in Northern ireland have their chief officers designated as (a) town clerk, (b) chief executive, (c) town clerk and chief executive and (d) other designation. [4396]

Mr. Moss: None of the 26 district councils uses the designation town clerk. Seven councils refer to their chief officer as chief executive, 12 refer to the post-holder as town clerk and chief executive and seven refer to the post-holder as clerk and chief executive.

Private Clegg

Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to refer the case of Private Clegg back to the Court of Appeal. [4288]

Sir John Wheeler: My right hon. and learned Friend received from Lee William Clegg's solicitors an application that his case be referred to the Court of Appeal for Northern Ireland again under section 14 of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980.

My right hon. and learned Friend has sought an independent scientific report on the material submitted in support of the application to assist him in deciding whether he would be justified in referring the case to the Court of Appeal.

Terrorism (Compensation)

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many and what occasions and dates he has used his exceptional power to pay criminal injury or damage compensation to (a) terrorists, (b) members and (c) former members of illegal organisations. [4453]

Sir John Wheeler: In the four and a half years since my right hon. and learned Friend took up his duties in Northern Ireland, the discretionary power to make payments in lieu of compensation where applicants have been disallowed because of convictions for terrorism and/or for membership of unlawful association has been exercised on four occasions and on the basis of the special circumstances of each individual case. All these applicants had previous convictions for terrorism and none for membership of unlawful associations. In 1993–94 there was one payment, in 1994–95 there were two payments and in 1995–96 there was one payment. No payments have been, or are likely to be, made to any applicant who has a continuing membership of an unlawful association.

Arable Area Scheme

Dr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many payments were made in Northern Ireland in 1995–96 for set-aside under the arable area scheme (a) between £0 and £5,000, (b) £5,001 and £10,000, (c) £10,001 and £15,000, (d) £15,001 and £20,000, (e) £20,001 and £25,000 and (f) over £25,001. [4225]

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The information is as follows:

Value £	Set-aside payment 1995–96
0–5,000	201
5,001–10,000	11
10,001–15,000	1

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5079]

Sir John Wheeler: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure which is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

DEFENCE

Helicopters

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what qualifications are required for service personnel to fly helicopters in each of the services. [4424]

Mr. Soames [holding answer 15 November 1996]: The qualifications required by service personnel to fly helicopters are as follows:

Royal Navy

Education—minimum five GCSEs (English and Mathematics) and two A-levels (or equivalent)

Flying aptitude tests and medical

Initial officer training

Army

Minimum rank Lance-corporal (recommended for Corporal)

Pre-selection course, including aptitude tests, written tests and medical

Royal Air Force

Education—minimum five GCSEs (English and Mathematics) and two A-levels (or equivalent)

Flying aptitude tests and medical

Initial officer training

Elementary flying training

Basic, advanced and operational helicopter flying training are currently carried out separately by the single services. However, from 1 April 1997 all basic and advanced helicopter training will be provided for the three services by the defence helicopter flying school, a tri-service establishment at Shawbury.

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 6 November, Official Report, column 521, what arrangements have been made for industrial participation in respect of the purchase of helicopters. [3664]

Mr. Arbuthnot: As part of the Apache industrial participation arrangements, GKN Westland committed that 50 per cent. of the baseline contract work would be placed in the UK. GKN Westland has now identified how this will be achieved. It has already placed contracts for 35 per cent. and its offshore subcontractors have placed contracts for a further 5 per cent., making a total of 40 per cent. In accordance with MOD policy, the contract awards from the offshore subcontractors are now being audited to verify their claims. GKN Westland is thus well on course to meet its commitment in full.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the paper in The New England Journal of Medicine, reporting the mortality studies of Gulf war veterans conducted by Dr. Han Kang. [4573]

Mr. Soames: My Department has noted with interest the paper "Mortality among US Veterans of the Persian Gulf War" by Dr. Han Kang and Tim Bullman.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the interim report of the US presidential advisory committee on Gulf war veterans' illnesses. [4571]

Mr. Soames: My Department has noted the interim report of the US presidential advisory committee, and will examine its final report, when published, with great interest.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the director of the Persian Gulf Veterans Co-ordinating Board in the US concerning research on the illnesses of Gulf war veterans. [4574]

Mr. Soames: I visited the US earlier this month, where I held discussions with the senior members of the US Administration and their staff, including the director of the Persian Gulf Veterans Co-ordinating Board, about research into the illnesses of Gulf war veterans. My Department's officials, both here and in Washington, maintain a very close liaison with their US colleagues, including the director of the Persian Gulf Veterans Co-ordinating Board, on research and other issues relating to the health of Gulf war veterans.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the research carried out by the division of epidemiology and scientific graphics laboratory at the South Western medical school in Dallas relating to the causes of illnesses developed by Gulf war veterans. [4572]

Mr. Soames: We are aware of research into Gulf health issues being conducted at the University of Texas South Western medical school in Dallas, including the work of Dr. Robert Haley. We will look with interest at the results of Dr. Haley's research when they are published.

Disbanded and Merged Regiments

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will fund a travelling exhibition to exhibit (a) regimental silver. (b) works of art, (c) colours and (d) trophies for all disbanded and merged Regular and Territorial Army regiments. [4819]

Mr. Soames: No. The objects concerned are non-public property, and are not the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence. The question of any funding for such a travelling exhibition would therefore be for the regiment(s) concerned to address.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the location of (a) regimental silver, (b) works of art, (c) colours and (d) trophies for all disbanded and merged Regular and Territorial Army regiments. [4820]

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet representatives from Sheffield museums to discuss mounting an exhibition to exhibit (a) regimental silver, (b) works of art, (c) colours and (d) trophies of the disbanded and merged Regular and Territorial Army regiments. [4906]

Mr. Soames: No. The objects mentioned are non-public property, and are not the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence. Museums interested in mounting such an exhibition should therefore approach regiments direct.

Admiral Sir Peter Abbot

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Admiral Sir Peter Abbot required official clearance of the text of his speech to the Royal United Services Institution on 17 October; and to what extent his speech represents Government policy. [5147]

Mr. Soames: Ministerial clearance is not required for addresses given to private bodies such as the Royal United Services Institute, whose purpose is to encourage debate of relevant issues. The speech did not represent Government policy; rather, Admiral Abbot was developing a personal view, contributing to just such an academic debate. The issues raised in the speech are already in the public domain.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5087]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Contracts

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contracts his Department has had with (a) Robert Wilson and Sons Ltd., (b) Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group Ltd. and (c) their subsidiary companies during the last five years; what was the value of each of these contracts; what goods were supplied; and to what extent these contracts will be affected by the closure of the Robert Wilsons and Sons Ltd. plant in Kilwinning. [5057]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The data held centrally for MOD headquarters contracts show that the following contracts have been awarded since 1993:

Robert Wilson and Sons (Est. 1849) Ltd. (part of Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group)

	Value £
1995
Produced at Kilwinning
Canned meats	333,000
Retort pouched meals	1,392,000
Pouched water	42,000
1996
Produced at Kilwinning
Canned meats	222,400
Retort pouched meals	4,639,000
Pouched water	59,600

HL Foods (part of Hillsdown Holdings)

	Value £
1994
Produced at Kilwinning
Canned meats	265,000
Retort pouched meals	1,365,000
Produced at North Walsham
Baked beans	38,000
1995
Produced at North Walsham
Baked beans	49,000
1996
Produced at North Walsham
Baked beans	66,000

The following contracts were placed with the former company Haywood Foods Ltd. part of Hillsdown Holdings plc:

Hayward Foods Ltd. (part of Hillsdown Holdings)

1993	Value £
Produced at Kilwinning
Canned meats	244,000
Canned puddings	31,000
Retort pouch meals	1,491,000
Produced at North Walsham
Baked beans	34,000
1994
Produced at Long Sutton
Tinned carrots	19,000

The above companies are subsidiaries of the large Hillsdown Holdings plc group, which includes a large number of household name food, domestic goods, furniture and property companies, for example, and further research on those companies could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Several of the contracts will be completed before the planned closure of the Kilwinning site early next year. Work that is not completed will be novated to another "sister" company within the Hillsdown Group and it is not expected that there will be any adverse effect on the MOD.

Gurkhas

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that Gurkha soldiers serving in the British Army receive the same pay, pensions, family accommodation and other terms and conditions of service as soldiers in the British Army. [4777]

Mr. Soames: A full review of questions relating to Gurkha conditions of service is currently being undertaken by my Department, including questions relating to their pay, family accommodation and other related matters. The review, which has been prompted by the imminent withdrawal from Hong Kong, is examining the existing arrangements with a view to making them more appropriate to the move of the Gurkha home base from Hong Kong to the United Kingdom. All Gurka terms and conditions of service are underpinned by the 1947 tri-partite agreement signed by the Governments of India, Nepal and the United Kingdom, and will continue to be governed by these arrangements. In essence, the rates of pay and pension are based on those paid to the Indian army as stated in the agreement. British Gurkhas do, however, receive a substantial addition to their basic pay which takes into account the cost of living in their duty station.

Gurkha pensions, while not part of the same review, are, as a matter of routine, reviewed annually. One of the factors taken into account is the rate of inflation in Nepal; another is the rates of pension paid to Indian army Gurkhas as governed by the tri-partite agreement. British Gurkha pensions were increased by 15 per cent. in 1996.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4527]

Mr. Howard: The Home Office takes its responsibilities to the environment seriously, and has been represented at each of the green Ministers meetings.

The policies and programmes of my Department have been assessed as having low direct environmental sensitivity. Thus, the environmental audits undertaken by the Home Office have concentrated on estate management issues where scope for green housekeeping efficiencies has been sought. All local property centres are asked to conduct an annual green housekeeping audit. A programme of energy surveys has been run in response to the target set by the Department of the Environment to reduce energy consumption by 15 per cent. in the period from 1990 to 1995. Notable successes were at the police training centres at Bruche and Cwmbran and at the police scientific development branch premises in Langhurst and Sandridge, where implementing the recommendations of the reviews produced falls in energy consumption of between 16.8 per cent. and 22.9 per cent. over the five years. Where appropriate, the Department adopts the Building Research Establishment environmental assessment method as a means of enhancing the environmental performance of new offices and those undergoing major refurbishment.

Motorways (Objects thrown from Bridges)

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police authority area and by location the number of reported incidents involving objects thrown from motorway bridges at vehicles for each year since 1991 to date, including how many (a) injuries were caused, (b) fatalities were caused, (c) resulted in prosecution and (d) resulted in conviction in each year from 1991 to date. [4695]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not collected centrally.

British Citizenship

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria he uses in determining the suitability or otherwise of applicants for British citizenship. [4718]

Mr. Kirkhope: The criterion applied is whether the applicant meets the statutory requirements of the British Nationality Act 1981 relevant to his or her application.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what official publications inform applicants of the criteria that will be used when determining British citizenship applications. [4717]

Mr. Kirkhope: The requirements for British citizenship are set out in the British Nationality Act 1981 and in a number of information leaflets, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refusals of applications for British citizenship he has determined since 1992. [4738]

Mr. Kirkhope: Since 1 January 1992, 32,272 applications for British citizenship have been refused.

Zoos and Circuses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which provisions of the winter quarters regulations apply to animals held by zoos; if he will apply them to animals held by circuses; and if he will make a statement. [4578]

Mr. Sackville: The Zoo Licensing Act 1981, but not the winter quarters regulations, applies to the keeping of animals in zoos. Circus animals will continue to be governed by the Performing Animals (Regulations) 1925 and the Protection of Animals Act 1911.

Alcohol (Minors)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for selling (a) alcohol and (b) alcopops to under-age children have taken place in England and Wales in each of the last five years; what proportion of prosecutions have involved sales from (i) public houses, (ii) off licences, (iii) supermarkets and (iv) other outlets; and if he will make a statement. [4404]

Mr. Maclean: The information held centrally does not distinguish between the forms in which alcohol is sold or the types of retail outlet proceeded against.

The table shows the number of prosecutions for offences of selling intoxicating liquor to persons under 18.

Number of defendants prosecuted for the offence of selling intoxicating liquor to persons under 18[1] 1991 to 1995

England and Wales

	Prosecutions
1991	309
1992	195
1993	156
1994	137
1995	198

[1] Section 169(1) Licensing Act 1994.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his policy on people purchasing alcohol on behalf of minors. [4414]

Mr. Maclean: I fully support the proposals of my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink) to enable the police to confiscate alcohol from people under 18 drinking alcohol in a public place, and to seize alcohol from people who are 18 if it is intended for consumption by under-age drinkers in public.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) people and (b) children under the age of 18 have been prosecuted for alcohol-related crime in England and Wales in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [4406]

Mr. Maclean: It is possible to distinguish centrally only defendants prosecuted for offences under the intoxicating liquor laws as opposed to alcohol-related crimes.

Information is given in the table:

Number of defendants prosecuted for offences under the intoxicating liquor laws by age 1991 to 1995

England and Wales

Closed Circuit Television Schemes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the cost per crime averted of the five most expensive closed circuit television schemes installed since 1992; and if he will list these. [4488]

Mr. Maclean: This information is not available.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the increase in (a) staff and (b) costs of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board in each of the past five years. [4094]

Mr. Maclean: The information is summarised in the table:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96
Average number of staff in post	381	386	414	458	466
Total cost of administration (£ million)	13.1	14.2	17.3	17.8	19.3
Compensation paid (£ million)	143.7	152.2	165.1	175.4	179.0

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions, on application to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, victims have been paid before a criminal act has been established in the courts in each of the past five years; and what proportion these payments represent of the overall payments made by the board. [4095]

Mr. Maclean: The data requested are not available. The compensation arrangements for victims of crimes of violence, whether under the common law damages scheme or the tariff-based one which superseded it on 1 April 1996, do not require the act of violence to have been established in a court of law. Many assailants are unidentified or otherwise untraced. Where, however, a trial is pending, it may be necessary for the final assessment of a claim to be delayed until the outcome of the trial is known, since the proceedings may raise issues of eligibility.

Drug Traffickers

Ms Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what sums of money have been recovered from drug traffickers since 1 January; and what proportion of this amount is ear-marked for anti-drug abuse projects. [3898]

Mr. Maclean: No figures are yet available for 1996. The latest available figures show that, in the last financial year—1995–96—£5,343,241.63 was recovered from convicted drug traffickers. Under present accounting arrangements, all confiscated money is paid directly into the Consolidated Fund, from which Government expenditure generally, including substantial funding for drug-related work, is financed. In addition, sums realised from the enforcement of overseas confiscation orders, asset shares and gifts received as a result of co-operation with other countries are specifically ear-marked for spending on anti-drug projects through the seized assets fund, and £168,000 has been made available in this way for spending in 1996–97.

Prison Service

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an independent audit of the performance of the Prison Service against its key performance indicators for each six-month period of 1995–96 and 1996–97; and if he will make a statement about the accuracy of the information relating to the indicators. [2941]

Miss Widdecombe: The Prison Service's performance against its key performance indicators—KPIs—for 1996–97 and previous years were published in its corporate plan 1996 to 1999, and I understand that the Director General has written to you with details of performance in the first six months of 1996–97.

I am satisfied that the overall quality of the KPI data is good. As you know, the definition of the KPIs is agreed with Ministers, and the Prison Service has detailed instructions setting out how the data are to be collected. The Prison Service's own standards audit team is currently auditing data collection for KPIs in individual establishments. Preliminary results confirm that overall quality is good, while suggesting ways in which data definitions could be further tightened so as to improve quality further.

It is important that there is independent validation of the Prison Service's data, and the Home Office internal audit unit is about to commence an audit which will be external to the agency.

Crime Prevention

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to meet local authority representatives to discuss crime prevention; and if he will make a statement. [4826]

Mr. Maclean: None, but officials of the crime prevention agency are in regular contact with local authority representatives.

Police Dogs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much compensation each police force in England and Wales has paid to members of the public following complaints about the use of police dogs in each year since 1985; [3621]

(2) how many complaints the Police Complaints Authority has received about the use of police dogs in each police force in each year since 1985; [3535]

(3) how many complaints each police force in England and Wales has received concerning the use of police dogs in each year since 1985; [3534]

(4) how many times each police force in England and Wales has paid compensation to members of the public following complaints about the use of police dogs in each year since 1985. [3620]

Mr. Maclean: Information on the number of complaints against the police involving police dogs, or cases in which compensation is paid by police forces, is not recorded centrally.

Sentencing and Detention

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to halve the maximum sentence for burglary and for the maximum period of detention at a youth custody establishment; and if he will make a statement. [4672]

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to reduce the maximum sentence for burglary or the maximum period of detention in a young offender institution.

Crime (Sentences) Bill

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the likely rise in the prison population as a result of changes to the parole system outlined in the Crime (Sentences) Bill; and if he will make a statement. [4675]

Mr. Maclean: The Crime (Sentences) Bill requires the courts to take account of the abolition of parole and the changes in early release arrangements when passing sentence, with a view to ensuring that, in general, prisoners should spend broadly the same length of time in prison as they do now.

Mr. Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure that a practice direction is issued on completion of the Crime (Sentences) Bill on the appropriateness of sentence lengths; and if he will make a statement. [4677]

Mr. Maclean: It is for the Lord Chief Justice to determine whether to issue a practice direction.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 5 November, Official Report, column 434, and 12 November, Official Report, column 119, if he will set out the statistical difference between the number of offenders found guilty or cautioned and the number of offences ending in a conviction or caution. [4977]

Mr. Maclean: The number of offenders found guilty or cautioned is a count of the number of occasions on which a finding of guilt is made or a caution administered. On each occasion, an offender may be found guilty of, or cautioned for, more than one offence. For reasons of practicality and cost effectiveness, routine Home Office statistics are offender based and relate to the principal offence—generally the one attracting the highest penalty.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5083]

Mr. Howard: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the PFI. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is expected to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report."

Any other commitments specific to particular projects, including those incurred by the supplier, are monitored by managers responsible for ensuring that satisfactory service is received. Contingent liabilities are reported to Parliament.

Tote

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will allow the Horserace Totalisator Board to take bets on lotteries run outside the United Kingdom. [5546]

Mr. Kirkhope: We will shortly lay an order allowing the Tote to take bets on the outcome of foreign lotteries.

The Government are also supporting the private Member's Bill introduced in another place to allow the Tote to take fixed odds bets on non-sporting events.

Convictions and Cautions

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of crimes ending in a court conviction in each police force area of England and Wales in the year to June; [3634]

(2) if he will list the number of crimes ending in a caution in each police force area of England and Wales in the year to June. [3635]

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 18 November 1996]: The information requested will not be available until autumn 1997.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department first became aware of the difficulties of calculating remissions for convicted prisoners originally held on remand. [3825]

Mr. Howard [holding answer 14 November 1996]: On four occasions since 1982, the courts upheld the Prison Service's approach to the complex sentence calculations required by section 67 of the Criminal Justice Act 1967.

The Prison Service proposed in July 1995 that work be undertaken to develop a simpler system of sentence calculation. That work led to the new arrangements for determining the effect on release dates of time spent on remand contained in the Crime (Sentences) Bill. This provides that in all cases the judge will determine, when passing sentence, how much remand time will count against the sentence.

Crime (Clear-up Rate)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of crimes cleared up by the police in each police force area of England and Wales in the year to June. [3636]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Statistics on clear-ups are published only on a calendar year basis. The latest available data relate to 1995 and were given in the reply to the hon. Member on 12 November, Official Report column 199.

Knives

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to adopt a knife code along the lines of that adopted in Coventry; [4106]

(2) What discussions he has had with the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on the introduction of a knife code. [4107]

Mr. Maclean [holding answers 18 November 1996]: My right hon. and learned Friend has given his full support to the voluntary knife code adopted by retailers in Coventry, and would support its introduction elsewhere. My right hon. and learned Friend has not discussed the code with the hon. Member for Blackburn.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the extent to which crimes involving knives has fallen in Coventry since the knife code was introduced in the City. [4108]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 November 1996]: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes involving the use of knives were committed (a) nationally and (b) in the west midlands in each year since 1990; and what was the annual percentage change. [4105]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 November 1996]: For crimes recorded by the police, the information is not available centrally. The best estimate from the 1996 British crime survey is that, in 1995, there were about 160,000 incidents of wounding and robbery in which the offenders had—but did not necessarily use—a knife. Information for previous years covered by the survey—1992 and 1994—cannot reliably be compared.

Criminal Justice System

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library (a) the raw data used to produce the first chart presented on page 25 of "Digest 3: Information on the Criminal Justice System in England and Wales" and (b) similar statistics with percentages for (i) 1995 and (ii) 1981. [4770]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 November 1996]: Information used to produce the first chart on page 25 of Digest 3 is presented in the table below. Information for 1995 and 1981 is not available in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

	Total numbers[1]	Percentage of offences committed
Offences committed	11,566.7	100
Offences reported	5,457.6	47
Offences recorded	3,089.6	27
Offences cleared up	571.4	4.9
Offences resulting in a caution or conviction	310.3	2.7
Offences resulting in a conviction	225.9	2.0

[1] Covers criminal damage; theft of a motor vehicle; theft from a motor vehicle (including attempts); bicycle theft; domestic burglary; wounding; robbery; theft from a person.

State Opening of Parliament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the police participation in the state opening of Parliament. [4691]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 November 1996]: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister stated in his reply to the hon. Member on 11 November Official Report, column 32, any additional costs of police staff who took part in the ceremony are not separately costed.

Sexual Offences (Prosecution)

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place under section 12 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 since the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 came into operation. [4795]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 November 1996]: Amendments to section 12 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 were implemented on 3 November 1994.

Information for prosecutions completed in 1995 is given in the table.

Number of defendants prosecuted for offences under Section 12 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 as amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994

England and Wales, 1995

West Yorkshire Police Force

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) police officers and (b) civilian staff were employed by the West Yorkshire police force in each year since 1979 to date. [4803]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 19 November 1996]: The information is as follows:

As at March	Police strength	Civilian strength
1979[1]	4,739	1,191
1980	4,805	1,199
1981	5,084	1,270
1982	5,147	1,305
1983	5,145	1,238
1984	5,109	1,229
1985	4,991	1,253
1986	5,145	1,275
1987	5,142	1,360
1988	5,184	1,458
1989	5,278	1,613
1990	5,260	1,743
1991	5,268	1,875
1992	5,087	1,821
1993	5,037	1,867

Criminal Cases Review Committee

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information was provided by the chairman of the Criminal Cases Review Committee to the selection committee responsible for his appointment in respect of his membership of the freemasons; and if this was regarded by the committee as a personal matter which might cause public embarrassment. [4912]

Mr. Kirkhope [holding answer 19 November 1996]: None. In making its recommendations to my right hon. and learned Friend, the selection committee was guided by the overriding principle of selection based on merit. Sir Frederick was an outstanding candidate.

Police Assistance

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning insurance cover for special constables, lay visitors and other volunteers providing assistance to the police. [4649]

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Representations have been received from the Lake District Search and Mountain Rescue Association on behalf of the Mountain Rescue Council, and from a small number of right hon. and hon. Members.

Prisons

Mr. Chris Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give an estimate of the number of places for prisoners in HM prisons in each of the years 1996 to 2006. [52]

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Richard Tilt to Mr. Chris Davies, dated 20 November 1996:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of places for prisoners in each of the years 1996 to 2006.

Accommodation is defined as Planning CNA in use, which excludes places taken out of use for refurbishment and simple sanitation projects, and a small operating margin. It represents the total number of uncrowded places estimated to be available in the estate. It is not the operational capacity, which is the number of prisoners the estate can hold without serious risk to good order, security and the proper running of regimes and which allows for overcrowding. At the end of October 1996 Operational Capacity was 58,977 compared to a total prison population of 57,587.

The latest available accommodation estimate includes new prisons at Fazakerley, Bridgend, and the proposed new prison at Agecroft as well as the re-built Lowdham Grange, all of which will be constructed under the private finance initiative. Also included is the increase in capacity to meet the recent rise in the prison population.

Over the longer term, further permanent measures will be required to hold the projected prison population. The size of the building programme and funding requirements are under discussion in the current Public Expenditure Round.

The forecast also excludes additional places to be built as set out in the White Paper to hold the increase in the prison population resulting from the Crime (Sentences) Bill.

The forecast is shown below.

Years	Accommodation
1995–96	48,350
1996–97	51,450
1997–98	54,800
1998–99	57,100
1999–00	58,550
2000–01 to 2005–06	58,550 in each year

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 21 November 1996

PRIME MINISTER

European Year Against Racism

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what plans Her Majesty's Government have to mark European Year Against Racism in 1997. [5438]

The Prime Minister: The Government believe that the European Year Against Racism will make a valuable contribution to the work already being carried out to combat racism and we intend to take a full and active part in the initiative to ensure its success.

We are setting up a national co-ordinating committee which will oversee this work in the United Kingdom. The committee will be chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Home Department, and I understand that the first meeting is due to take place on 2 December.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 November. [3995]

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 21 November. [3996]

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Government Information (Access)

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions part 7, paragraphs (a) and (b) of the code of practice on access to Government information has been used to deny information to hon. Members in each of the last three years, broken down by Government Departments and their agencies. [5445]

The Prime Minister: The information in the detail requested is not held centrally. Monitoring reports, showing progress in implementing the code of practice on access to Government information, are produced each year by the Office of Public Service. These include a breakdown of the exemptions cited when a refusal to provide information under the code results in a review of the case, but not a breakdown of the exemptions cited when the refusal is initially made. Copies of the monitoring reports published in March 1995 and March 1996 are available in the Libraries of the House.

EU General Affairs Council

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he or his Ministers have had with European Union Commissioners or officials on matters to be considered at the General Affairs Council on 25 November. [5473]

The Prime Minister: We have regular discussions with our European colleagues on all matters to be considered at the forthcoming General Affairs Council.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Prime Minister who will be representing the Government at the General Affairs Council on 25 November. [5475]

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend, the Foreign Secretary and the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the hon. Member for Boothferry, (Mr. Davis) will represent Her Majesty's Government at the General Affairs Council on 25 November.

ENVIRONMENT

Castle Cement

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor air quality around the Castle Cement plant in Clitheroe. [4715]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment has established a fixed monitoring station in the village of Chatburn in the vicinity of the Ribblesdale plant. The station is carrying out monitoring:

for PM_{10} (fine particles) using both the tapered element oscillating microbalance ("TEOM") automatic method and non-continuous sampling;

for NO, using the continuous ozone chemiluminescence system;

for NO_2 non-continuously using diffusion tubes;

for SO_2 using the continuous UV flourescence method.

All pollutant measurements will be quality assured to national standards.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business; [4944]

(2) what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4954]

Sir Paul Beresford: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Construction Industry (Timber)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to promote the use in the construction industry of timber produced from sustainable industries in rural areas. [4902]

Mr. Clappison: The Department of the Environment is supporting a number of innovation projects to encourage the use of sustainable timber from United Kingdom forests. These should assist the development of rural industries. One such project will result in the construction of a demonstration building at Hook forest in Dorset.

Local Government Finance

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the reduction in public expenditure from the measures taken over the last 15 years to restrict expenditure by local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [4907]

Sir Paul Beresford: Since 1990–91, when capping in its current form was introduced, it has been directly responsible for reducing the budgets of those authorities that challenged their caps by a total that has now reached over a third of a billion pounds a year compared with the budgets originally set. The great majority of authorities did not challenge their caps, but set budgets within the limits implied by the capping criteria; although no direct estimate can be made, it is clear that in these cases, too, capping has been generally successful in ensuring that many authorities have budgeted at a lower level than would otherwise have been the case.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to prevent local authorities setting budgets prior to the announcement of standard spending assessments; and if he will make a statement. [4825]

Sir Paul Beresford: I have no powers to stop an authority setting its budget before the statement on the local authority finance settlement. However, it is highly unlikely that an authority would wish to set a budget before this date and I am not aware of any authority having done so in recent years.

Homelessness (Sheffield)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken to reduce homelessness in Sheffield; and if he will make a statement. [4904]

Mr. Clappison: In 1996–97, £7.8 million of grants are being paid under section 73 of the Housing Act 1985 to voluntary sector organisations which prevent or relieve homelessness. Of this, nearly £2 million funds the national Homelessness Advice Service, based on Citizens Advice Bureaux, which advises people who are homeless or potentially so. The service is available from four bureaux in Sheffield and at the specialist Sheffield debt support unit.

The remaining grant supports around 180 projects throughout England which offer direct practical help to single homeless people by finding accommodation and providing follow-up support. The Nomad advice centre in Sheffield, which helped over 170 people to find accommodation last year, will receive £25,780 this year.

Construction Industry (Insolvency Protection)

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to begin the independent review of insolvency protection for the construction industry; what the format of the review will be; and if he will make a statement. [4789]

Mr. Clappison: I intend to put proposals for the further consideration of these issues to the Construction Industry Council shortly.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington), of 1 November, Official Report, column 269, what assessment he has made of the reason for the named areas having high rates of asbestos-related mesothelioma; and for what reasons a breakdown by district is not available from 1991. [5066]

Sir Paul Beresford: The high rates of mesothelioma in the districts mentioned in my reply of 1 November are related to the heavy industrial use of asbestos in the past in these areas, including shipbuilding, ship repairing and the manufacture of asbestos products.

The analysis was completed by the Health and Safety Executive only up until 1991 because at the time those were the most recent data available. The analysis will be updated next year to include the data from 1992 to 1995.

Doncaster Urban Development Plan

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the inspectors' report into the Doncaster urban development plan to be published; and if copies will be made available to hon. Members. [5139]

Sir Paul Beresford: The inspector's report on objections to the Doncaster unitary development plan is expected to be delivered to the Doncaster metropolitan borough council at the end of February 1997. It will be for the council to decide when to publish the report. Copies of the report would then be available on request from the council.

Ferris Wheel (South Bank)

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to call in the millennium wheel planning application. [5545]

Mr. Gummer: I have no plans to call in the application for the millennium wheel. The wheel is an inspired idea and an imaginative way to mark the millennium, providing unparalleled, once-in-a-lifetime views of the heart of the capital. It has caught people's imaginations and created a sense of excitement about the millennium, not least among children.

It will be a boost to the economy of the south bank and will bring visitors and new life to this important stretch of the River Thames.

Lambeth has consulted widely. I have no reason to believe it has not considered the application thoroughly and taken into account the range of opinion held on the wheel. I am satisfied that it will not be a permanent feature; to ensure that, I have today issued directions to the council to inform me of any future applications affecting the site of the wheel.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4983]

Sir Paul Beresford: The Department of the Environment will be introducing its resource accounting system during 1997–98. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis of the 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what level of training is currently required of employees providing services under the home energy efficiency scheme; and how he proposes to ensure an appropriate level of skills training in relation to any new measures incorporated into the scheme. [5373]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This well regarded scheme has achieved high standards of workmanship and customer care through the efforts of the scheme's managers, Eaga Ltd., and the network of installers providing local delivery of the service. I expect these standards to be maintained or improved on in the future, whether or not any new measures are made available. The specification of any appropriate training requirements for employees working within the scheme is a matter for Eaga Ltd. At present, it requires anyone who gives householders energy advice under the scheme to obtain a specified qualification.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has completed its review of the home energy efficiency scheme; and if he will make a statement. [5371]

Mr. Jones: I hope to make a statement about the future structure of the scheme shortly.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the additional financial resources needed to fund any new measures introduced as a result of the review of the home energy efficiency scheme; and if he will make a statement. [5372]

Mr. Jones: Any changes which may be made in future to the home energy efficiency scheme will be structural, intended to make it even more effective and give better value for money. They would not be linked to any particular level of annual financial allocation. We remain fully committed to helping the most vulnerable people to keep warm and use energy more efficiently, and this successful scheme, on which we have spent nearly £350 million since it started some six years ago, has now made over 2 million households more comfortable.

Tesco Store, Tonbridge

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the public inquiry into the proposal by Tesco for a retail store at Cannon lane, Tonbridge, is due to commence: and to whom and at what address representations about this proposal, including requests to give oral evidence at the inquiry, should be sent. [5444]

Sir Paul Beresford: The local public inquiry into the proposal by Tesco for a retail store at Cannon lane, Tonbridge is due to commence at 10.00 am on Tuesday 25 February 1997 at the council offices, the air station, West Malling. Representations and requests to give oral evidence at the inquiry should be addressed to Mrs. Christine Kavanagh at the Government Office for the South East, Bridge house, 1 Walnut Tree close, Guildford, Surrey GU1 4GA.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to change the status of the British Waterways Board as a nationalised industry. [5255]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have no plans to change the status of the British Waterways Board as a nationalised industry, but as part of the normal process of reviewing policy options I am continuing to consider jointly with the British Waterways Board whether there are options which would allow the board greater flexibility in generating additional income for the development of its canal network.

Development Land (Bedfordshire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 323, on proposals for development near Henlow, Bedfordshire, if he will list the representations he has received from individuals and organisations in respect of the development; what acreage of vacant industrial and commercial development land there is in Bedfordshire; and when he hopes to make a decision on a public inquiry about this matter. [5298]

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We received a number of representations about the proposal, and those people and organisations will now have the opportunity to express their views at a public inquiry, the date of which has yet to be arranged. The availability of alternative locations for the proposed development will be an issue for the inquiry.

Housing Ombudsman

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in establishing an independent housing ombudsman service for dealing with complaints against social landlords in England; and if he will make a statement. [5865]

Mr. Curry: The Housing Act 1996 provides for the first time that the Secretary of State may approve a scheme for the establishment of an independent housing ombudsman service for dealing with complaints against social landlords—the definition in the Act does not include local authorities. Earlier in the year we invited the current non-statutory housing association tenants' ombudsman to consult widely on a draft scheme for England which could be in place in time for 1 April 1997.

Following consultation, the ombudsman has submitted a scheme which I have approved. In considering the scheme, I have been concerned to ensure continuity with the existing non-statutory service. But I have also been keen to ensure that the new service is soundly based and able to achieve value for money for members, that its administration is straightforward and accountable, that its procedure for dealing with complaints is accessible and fair, and that it has suitable and effective arrangements for safeguarding the independence of the ombudsman. The scheme will be administered by a company limited by guarantee, with equal representation on the board for member landlords, tenants and the public interest.

All social landlords must subscribe to the independent housing ombudsman service. This scheme should meet their needs and those of others involved. It should also prove attractive to other landlords who may wish to join.

I have placed a copy of the approved scheme in the Library.

Housing Associations

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for paying tax relief grant to non-charitable housing associations in 1997–98 and future years. [5866]

Mr. Curry: We published a consultation paper on 31 July setting out our proposals for the progressive reduction in tax relief grant payments to non-charitable housing associations. Eighty-eight responses were received.

Many associations said they needed more time to plan how to respond to the progressive reduction of tax relief grant and to effect any necessary changes. I accept this concern and recognise that associations need adequate time to accomplish a smooth change. I therefore propose that we continue to pay tax relief grant claims at the current norm of 100 per cent. during 1997–98 in respect of associations' tax liabilities up to and including 1996–97.

Another theme of the responses was that associations would appreciate a degree of certainty about future rates of payment. While I should not wish unreasonably to restrict future discretion in this matter, it seems to me helpful to give a clear steer to associations as to our future plans so that they can make appropriate arrangements. I therefore plan that in future years payments will be on a sliding scale. In 1998–99, in respect of tax liabilities during 1997–98, we plan to pay 75 per cent. of the first £50,000 of eligible claims, then 50 per cent. of the rest. In 1999–2000, in respect of tax liabilities during 1998–99, we plan to pay 50 per cent. of the first £25,000 of eligible claims, then 25 per cent. of the rest.

The Government believe that public resources for social housing should be allocated directly towards meeting priority needs in ways which produce good value for money. The Government are not convinced that the continued availability of tax relief grant would help achieve this. We therefore remain committed to its abolition when an appropriate legislative opportunity arises. In the meantime, although the statutory discretion to pay tax relief grant will remain, the Government would normally expect that, following the planned reductions outlined, associations will take steps to manage without tax relief grant payments.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Attorney-General what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4987]

The Solicitor-General: All the Departments and agencies for which the Law Officers are responsible will be introducing resource accounting systems during 1997, apart from the Serious Fraud Office which has already done so. The Law Officers' Departments and agencies, in common with other Departments, are preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, their first published resource accounts will be in respect of 1999–2000.

TRANSPORT

M6–M65 Link

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the additional traffic at (a) Blackburn, (b) Burnley and (c) Colne when the M6–M65 link-up is complete. [5240]

Mr. Watts: When the M65 Blackburn southern bypass is complete it is expected that the traffic could increase by about 10 per cent.—4,500 vehicles per day—east of M65 junction 6 at Whitebirk, Blackburn.

No estimate has been made of the increase in traffic on the M65 at Burnley or Colne.

Rail Freight

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had and with whom on encouraging heavy freight goods to travel by rail; and if he will make a statement. [5392]

Mr. Watts: Encouraging freight to travel by rail is an important element of the Government's transport policy. My right hon. Friend and I have frequent discussions with customers, operators and other interest groups.

Visual Flight Rules Procedures

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consult with the Civil Aviation Authority to assess whether the existing visual flight rules procedures are adequate or in need of revision. [4804]

Mr. Bowis [holding answer 20 November]: Visual flight rules procedures in the UK comply with the minimum standards set by the International Civil Aviation Organisation and contained in annexe 2 to the convention on international civil aviation. The Civil Aviation Authority is not aware of any problems with current VFR procedures but, as with all safety issues, they are kept under review.

MV Cap Afrique

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the total number of passengers and crew the MV Cap Afrique was carrying when it sailed at 17.30 hours from Dover on 6 November; [5408]

(2) how many passengers and crew in total the vessel MV Cap Afrique is permitted to carry. [5407]

Mr. Bowis: I have asked the chief executive of the Marine Safety Agency to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from R. M. Bradley to Mr. Elliot Morley, dated 21 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to reply to your Questions about the total number of passengers and crew carried by the MV "Cap Afrique".

The MV "Cap Afrique" is a French registered ro-ro cargo ship. The total number of passengers and crew on board the ship when it sailed from Dover at 17.30 hours on 6 November was 25 persons. The total number of passengers and crew that MV "Cap Afrique" is permitted to carry is 30 persons.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4994]

Mr. Bowis: My Department will be introducing its resource accounting system on 1 April 1998. The Department is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the year 2000 survey. In accordance with Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Air Freight

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made towards negotiating an open skies agreement for air freight between the United Kingdom and the United States; and if he will make a statement. [5460]

Mr. Bowis: Talks with the US Government about UK-US air services are continuing, with formal negotiations taking place in London on 4 to 6 December. Cargo services are one of the issues for discussion.

HOME DEPARTMENT

West Midlands Serious Crimes Squad

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those people convicted with the help of assistance from the west midlands serious crimes squad who have subsequently had their convictions overturned and the amount of compensation paid to each of them. [5000]

Mr. Kirkhope: The information requested is not available.

Closed Circuit Television

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications he has received from local authorities for CCTV installations; and if he will make a statement. [4828]

Mr. Maclean: Applications to the Home Office closed circuit television challenge competitions are made by local CCTV partnerships. Such partnerships are not necessarily led by local authorities, though most will involve them in some way. There were 480 bids in the first competition and 794 in the second. The closing date for bids in the third round of the competition was 20 November 1996.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of CCTV systems in crime reduction. [4827]

Mr. Maclean: The reports that we have received from the police and closed circuit television operators confirm that there have been significant reductions in crime and the fear of crime in the areas where CCTV has been introduced. These reductions demonstrate the value of CCTV as a crime prevention measure. In addition, we have published a number of research papers examining various aspects of CCTV effectiveness, the latest of which was "CCTV in Town Centres: Three Case Studies", published in November 1995.

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many CCTV systems have been installed in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [4829]

Mr. Maclean: Information about closed circuit television systems which have not received Home Office funding is not collected. Of those schemes which have received funding from the Home Office, 73 have been installed in the past 12 months. Approximately 250 more are in the process of installation.

Animal Testing

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding the Government have made available for research into alternatives to animal testing in the past five years; what plans he has to increase this funding; and if he will make a statement. [5012]

Mr. Sackville: Figures for the total Government spending on research into alternatives to the use of animals in scientific procedures are not available. With regard to the Animal Procedures Committee, the Home Office has in the last five years made the following funds available:

1991–92: £215,000
1992–93: £253,000
1993–94: £308,000
1994–95: £273,000
1995–96: £253,000.

There are no plans to increase the level of funding.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a list of the applications which his Department has received in the past year for licences to carry out animal tests, and the reasons why the applications were granted or not; and if he will make a statement. [5014]

Mr. Sackville: Section 24 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 prohibits the disclosure of such information.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken to ensure that research into alternative methods to animal testing and the validation of such methods by public bodies and private companies is co-ordinated; and if he will make a statement. [5016]

Mr. Sackville: The United Kingdom Government helped to establish and subsequently endorsed the European centre for the validation of alternative methods—ECVAM. It is the job of the centre to co-ordinate research into alternative methods including developmental and subsequent validation work.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to revise the licensing process for animal tests; if he will make it his policy to include (a) more rigorous cost-benefit analysis for the proposed testing, (b) details of what alternative tests have been considered and (c) the reasons why such alternatives cannot be used instead of the animal tests; and if he will make a statement. [5013]

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to revise the licensing process. We are satisfied that the current cost-benefit analysis required under section 5[4] of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 is sufficiently rigorous. The need to consider alternative tests is adequately addressed by section 5[5] of the Act.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken at an international level to ensure that alternative methods to animal tests are accepted by regulatory authorities in other countries; and if he will make a statement. [5015]

Mr. Sackville: The acceptance of alternative methods can be achieved only by their validation and incorporation into harmonisation processes and international guidelines, such as those promulgated by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

To this end, the Home Office jointly commissioned, in 1995, a study of the Draize eye irritation test and is liaising closely with regulators who represent United Kingdom interests in international forums.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4980]

Mr. Howard: My Department, on current plans, will be introducing its resource accounting capability during 1997–98 and, in common with other Departments, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the year 2000 public expenditure survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department will be for the 1999–2000 financial year.

Mr. Raghbir Singh

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on (a) the retention in prison of Mr. Raghbir Singh and (b) the basis for his continued detention following the decision by the European Court of Human Rights in the case of Karanjit Singh Chahal. [5149]

Mr. Howard: These matters are under review and I shall write to the hon. Member shortly.

Paedophile Register and Stalking Bills

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when drafts of the proposed paedophile register Bill and the proposed stalking Bill were prepared; and when the Bills will be published. [5251]

Mr. Maclean: Preparation of the Bills is well advanced and we will introduce them as soon as possible.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of (a) men and (b) women who were electronically tagged in England and Wales as at 18 November. [5507]

Mr. Sackville: By 18 November, 202 male and 14 female offenders had been tagged to monitor their compliance with curfew orders since the pilot trials began in July 1995.

Dogs (Tail Docking)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make illegal the docking of dog tails for non-veterinary reasons. [5404]

Mr. Sackville: There are no plans to do so.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4540]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office has no direct responsibilities for environmental auditing. In common with other Departments, the office seeks to exercise economy in the use of resources and to minimise waste.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Lord President of the Council what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4990]

Mr. Newton: The Privy Council Office will be introducing its resource accounting system during 1997–98. In common with other Departments, the PCO is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the year 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the PCO and all other Departments will be in respect of the year 1999–2000.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, representing the Church Commissioners, if he will list the ways in which the commissioners have (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4545]

Mr. Alison: Within their offices at No. 1 Millbank, the commissioners recycle aluminium cans and cardboard, and a paper recycling scheme is to be introduced by the end of the year. Where appropriate, the commissioners buy recycled materials. In addition, the heating system is computer controlled to minimise wastage and a heat recovery system is in operation. The commissioners are in the process of installing long-life, low-energy lamps throughout their offices.

The commissioners ensure that the needs of the environment and of the local community are properly taken into account in the management of their agricultural estates. On many of the commissioners' residential estates, heat loss—and thereby energy consumption—have been reduced by double glazing, draft proofing and loft insulation. Energy-saving light bulbs are used in the common parts of many buildings and, in conjunction with the Energy Saving Trust, they are installing energy-saving boilers which emit waste that is more environmentally friendly. They also maintain a number of communal gardens on their estates and paper re-cycling is carried out at one of the estate offices.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of his Department's time and resources is spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4955]

Mr. David Davis: Many Foreign and Commonwealth Office home departments and overseas posts are involved, to varying degrees, in activities related to Britain's membership of the European Union. The actual percentage of time and resources spent dealing with British membership of the European Union could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

MEPs (Pensions)

Sir Peter Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contributions are required from United Kingdom public funds for pensions of United Kingdom Members of the European Parliament; what qualifications are required for drawing such pensions; and to what extent increased pensions are financed through voluntary contributions. [4925]

Mr. David Davis: Pension arrangements for United Kingdom Members of the European Parliament are analogous to those for Members of the House of Commons. They are financed by the Exchequer and by contributions from individual MEP's at a rate of 6 per cent. of basic salary. Pensions are normally payable from age 65, based upon the MEPs, length of service and salary during the last 12 months in office. Opportunities are provided for MEPs to transfer service from other pension schemes, to purchase added years, and to make additional voluntary contributions, subject to Inland Revenue limits. Pension payments from UK public funds to former UK MEPs and dependants amounted to £159,000 in 1994–95, with a further £117,000 paid in transfer valued to other schemes.

MEPs may also subscribe to the EP's additional voluntary pensions scheme, two-thirds of payments to which are made from the EP section of the EC budget and one-third by the MEP. MEPs may draw a pension from this scheme from the age of 60 and after ceasing to hold office, if they have paid personal contributions for five years or more. The 1997 EC draft budget includes 11.6 million ecu, or £8.9 million, for EP payments to the scheme. The UK contribution is not hypothecated to individual budget lines, but expressed as a gross contribution to the total EC budget. The expected cost to the UK of abated expenditure such as administration is about 5 per cent. of the total.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4945]

Mr. Davis: Journeys to European destinations are not recorded according to the purpose of the visit and the information requested could therefore be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4982]

Mr. Hanley: We are making good progress towards our aim of producing resource accounts for financial year 1998–99. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for this Department and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

British Detainees (Venezuela)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he took following the latest meeting between the hon. Member for Leicester, East and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to make representations to the Venezuelan Government concerning the cases of Paul Loseby and James Miles;

when he was notified that Mr. Loseby and Mr. Miles were to be charged; and when consular officials last met Mr. James Miles and Mr. Paul Loseby. [5295]

Dr. Liam Fox: Following representations by the British ambassador in Caracas, the Venezuelan authorities have agreed that for the time being James Miles and Paul Loseby will be kept in police custody rather than being transferred to prison.

Consular officials in Caracas were told that Miles and Loseby were to be charged at 1900 hrs GMT on 19 November.

Consular officials last met James Miles and Paul Loseby on 19 November.

Arms Supplies (Rwanda and Zaire)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he first received reports alleging that British companies were arranging indirect arms transfers to (a) Hutu refugees or (b) other groups in Zaire; [5300]

(2) when he was first informed of allegations of arms sales to Rwanda or Zaire by British companies after April 1994; and what steps he took to investigate; [5301]

(3) when the Government first received reports of the possible involvement of Mil-Tec Corporation Ltd. in the export of armaments whose final destination was (a) Rwanda and (b) Zaire; and if he will make a statement. [5294]

Mr. David Davis: There were rumours in the press of arms shipments to Zaire in 1994. HM Customs informed this Department in early 1995 that they were investigating allegations that arms were being supplied to Rwanda or Zaire. They also investigated information received from the UN in September 1996. No evidence to support criminal proceedings was found. Recent allegations of arms supplies to Rwandan extremists by United Kingdom companies are being pursued. Her Majesty's Government continue to co-operate closely with the UN international commission of inquiry.

I cannot comment in detail on individual cases in these circumstances but would urge those with the relevant background to provide it to HM Customs to assist their investigation.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that no British companies are involved in the supply of arms to the combatants in the current conflict in the great lakes region of Africa; and if he will make a statement. [5368]

Mr. Davis: Order in Council 1993 No. 1787 as amended by No. 1637 of 22 June 1994 provides that, except under licence, no person shall:

"(a) supply or deliver

(b) agree to supply or deliver

(c) do any act likely to promote the supply or delivery of prohibited goods to Rwanda, or to, or to the order of, a person connected with Rwanda, or to any destination for the purpose of delivery, directly or indirectly, to Rwanda, or to, or to the order of, any person connected with Rwanda."

This applies to any person within the UK and to any person elsewhere who is a British national or a company incorporated in the UK. This includes British citizens in the Isle of Man and Channel Islands. The Government will extend the legislation to cover, inter alia, companies there at the earliest opportunity.

As announced on 19 November 1996, the Government have tasked an interdepartmental committee to examine rigorously our procedures in relation to trafficking in arms and to determine whether there has been a gap in our controls and if so what action needs to be taken.

Official Residences

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the official residences owned by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in (a) Japan, (b) Korea, (c) Singapore, (d) Hong Kong, (e) Thailand and (f) Malaysia; and if he will indicate (1) the occasions when Cabinet Ministers on official visits to those countries have (i) used the official residence and (ii) used a residence other than the official residence since 1979 and (2) the cost involved. [4733]

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The following official residences are owned:

Korea—Seoul

Singapore

Thailand—Bangkok

Malaysia—Kuala Lumpur

The residence in Tokyo is held on a long lease.

The remainder of the information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Millennium Exhibition

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment was made by her Department, before awarding the millennium exhibition to Greenwich, of the impact on local traffic and travel facilities of (a) the construction phase and (b) the operation of the exhibition. [3705]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The decision to hold the millennium exhibition at Greenwich was taken by the Millennium Commission. My Department had no role in the decision. I shall write to the hon. Member about the commission's assessment of the exhibition's impact on local traffic and travel facilities in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

National Lottery

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list (a) the number of projects which have received funding from the national lottery since its inception and (b) the number of projects currently under consideration by the national lottery for funding in (i) England, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales. [3864]

Mr. Sproat: To date, the national lottery distributing bodies have awarded a total of £2,421,238,117 to 10,681 projects. Applications currently under consideration by the distributing bodies are as follows:

Name of distributing body	Number of applications under consideration
England
Sports Council for England	1,393
Arts Council for England	220
Millennium Commission	28
Heritage Lottery Fund	947
National Lottery Charities Board	7,222
Total	9,810
Scotland
Scottish Sports Council	487
Scottish Arts Council	129
Millennium Commission	1
Heritage Lottery Fund	116
National Lottery Charities Board	1,125
Total	1,858
Wales
Arts Council of Wales	208
Sports Council of Wales	194
Millennium Commission	0
Heritage Lottery Fund	87
National Lottery Charities Board	1,057
Total	1,546

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list (a) the number of projects in Northern Ireland which have received funding from the proceeds of the national lottery since its inception and (b) the number of projects from Northern Ireland currently under consideration for funding by the national lottery. [3843]

Mr. Sproat: To date, the national lottery distributing bodies have awarded a total of £44,457,207 to 624 projects in Northern Ireland. Applications currently under consideration by the distributing bodies, in Northern Ireland, are as follows:

Northern Ireland

Name of distributing body	Number of applications under consideration
Arts Council of Northern Ireland	178
Sports Council for Northern Ireland	153
Millennium Commission	6
Heritage Lottery Fund	41
National Lottery Charities Board	324
Total	702

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list (a) the number of projects which have been given funding by the Millennium Commission and (b) the number of projects currently under consideration by the Millennium Commission, for (i) England, (ii) Scotland and (iii) Wales. [3845]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as chairman of the commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

"Sport: Raising the Game"

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on the implementation of Government sports policies set down in the document, "Sport: Raising the Game". [3999]

Mr. Sproat: In July 1995 the Government set out in "Sport: Raising the Game", its strategy for revitalising British sport at all levels from primary schools to the Olympic podium. Our aim is to put sport at the heart of weekly life in every school, to ensure that sporting opportunities continue after school, to improve the way we identify and support talented athletes, and to create a British academy of sport as the pinnacle of regional network of centres of sporting excellence and academies for particular sports.

Last July, in "Sport: Raising the Game", the first year report, we provided a detailed update which showed that significant progress had been made on the 38 action points set out in the original sports policy statement. This included the publication of the prospectus inviting bids to establish the British academy of sport.

Since July, further progress has been made. The Sports Council's £1 million challenge fund, to encourage schools–sports club links, has been launched; secondary schools have been invited to apply for the sportsmark and sportsmark gold awards, which recognise those schools that have particularly good policies for sport; teachers have been invited to attend free courses to help them gain national governing body of sport awards; and, on 14 November, the Sports Council launched its world class performance programme to provide support to our most talented athletes competing up to olympic and world championship level.

Hampstead Garden Suburb

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when she expects to decide upon the proposal to list further houses in Hampstead Garden Suburb. [3970]

Mr. Sproat: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will announce her decision shortly.

Child Care Workers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what guidance she has issued to the voluntary sector in respect of (a) training arrangements and (b) checks on the suitability of personnel working with children. [4361]

Mr. Sproat: The Department of National Heritage makes grants totalling nearly £12 million annually to organisations which support a healthy, cost-effective voluntary sector and promote volunteering. A number of these organisations are funded to provide a range of services to other voluntary organisations, including training.

Departments may issue guidance to voluntary organisations working in areas relevant to Departmental interests. For instance in 1993 the Home Office, in consultation with the Department of Health, the then Department for Education and the Welsh Office published "Safe from Harm: A Code of Practice for Safeguarding the Welfare of Children in Voluntary Organisations in England and Wales". The code offered a guide to good policy and practice in areas such as recruitment, supervision and management, and set out recommendations and statements of principle which voluntary organisations are asked to consider in the light of their own particular circumstances.

Guidance to voluntary organisations seeking checks on the suitability of personnel working with children was issued in 1994—Home Office Circular 42/94, Department of Health Local Authority Circular (94)22, Welsh Office Circular 64/94—"Protection of Children: Disclosure of Criminal Background to Voluntary Sector Organisations" which set out the criteria for obtaining criminal record checks for use by voluntary organisations which were members of the voluntary organisations consultancy service.

Copies of both the code of practice and the circular are available in the Library of the House.

Proposals for new arrangements for access to criminal record checks are in the Police Bill, currently before Parliament.

Elite Athletes

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on scholarship funding for élite athletes. [4693]

Mr. Sproat: The Government are committed, as part of their overarching strategy for sport, to seeing our leading sportsmen and sportswomen compete successfully in the olympics and other international events. The launch of the world class performance programme, this month, will provide support across the United Kingdom to our most talented athletes competing up to olympic and world championship level.

Up to £35 million a year will be available through the programme. Around half of this money will go to governing bodies for technical support services, such as coaching, altitude and warm weather training; the other half will go to individual athletes to cover normal living costs, personal training and travelling costs, allocated on the basis of need. Average awards to individual athletes are expected to be around £16,000 to £17,000, but the size of the individual awards will depend on personal circumstances. In return for lottery awards the sports concerned and the athletes who benefit, will be required to make a commitment to excellence in training and competition which will be closely monitored.

The world class performance programme is the first of only four separate revenue grant programmes. The three further programmes will be designed to attract and stage major international events in the UK, to provide community coaching and leadership schemes, and to identify better and develop the talent in the country's schools and sports clubs.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the ways in which her Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if she will make a statement. [4528]

Mr. Sproat: My Department undertakes environmental auditing primarily through environmental appraisal of policies and monitoring performance of green housekeeping matters.

In respect of environmental appraisal of policies, as my Department operates mainly through a range of non-departmental bodies, they are dealt with by customised guidance. An example is "Option Appraisal of Expenditure Decisions: A Guide for the DNH and its NDPB's", published in March 1996. Within the key heritage and tourism sectors, planning policy guidance no. 15: "Planning and the Historic Environment", and Planning Policy Guidance no. 21 are relevant.

In November 1995 in partnership with the English tourist board, the Countryside Commission and the Rural Development Commission, my Department published "Sustainable Rural Tourism: Opportunities for Local Action". This gives practical advice on how to ensure rural tourism is in harmony with the environment.

As far as green housekeeping is concerned we have published a strategy for our buildings and have targets to reduce energy consumption. There are also several waste minimisation policies to include recycling of paper, glass, plastic cups and cans. We are to purchase a range of greener stationery items.

British Museum

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the present funding of the British museum to support the staffing levels necessary to fulfil its statutory obligations. [4579]

Mr. Sproat: The Government are still considering the British museum's case for funding. Among many factors to be taken into account will be the recently published report by Mr. Andrew Edwards, which was commissioned by the British museum and commented in some detail on staffing levels at the museum. Grant-in-aid allocations will be announced immediately after the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget statement.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of her Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4958]

Mr. Sproat: Detailed records are not kept, which would allow such a percentage to be calculated. However, most sections of the Department are involved in some way with European Union business.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4948]

Mr. Sproat: The cost of attendance by Department of National Heritage Ministers and officials during the period 1 November 1995–31 October 1996 at European Union meetings was £48,516.16. This includes travel costs which may be subsequently refunded by the European Commission.

British Steel Industry

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps she is taking to promote educational and tourist interest in the British steel industry. [4842]

Mr. Sproat: Britain has a unique industrial heritage which is of interest to both domestic and overseas visitors. Funding is made available through the English tourist board and the regional tourist boards for the development and promotion of tourism within England. Through their activities the tourist boards help stimulate interest in a wide range of activities and types of development all over the country, including many industry-based attractions, and the ETB designated 1993 as Industrial Heritage Year.

Museums and Heritage Centres

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will list the museums or heritage centres covering the history and national heritage of (a) the rail industry, (b) the coal industry, (c) the car industry and (d) the steel industry. [4841]

Mr. Sproat: The Museum and Galleries Commission's DOMUS database identifies the following museums as being wholly or partly devoted to the history of the rail, coach, car or steel industries:

Railways
Birmingham Railway Museum
Bo'ness and Kinneil Railway
Buckinghamshire Railway Centre
Cheddleton Railway Centre

There is no definitive listing of heritage centres available held centrally.

Amsterdam (Wreck)

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what recent discussions her Department has had with the Dutch authorities about the protection of the wreck of the Amsterdam. [4707]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The Dutch Government are the owners of the wreck of the Amsterdam and, therefore, have prime responsibility for decisions about its future. However, the Amsterdam is a designated site under the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973, for which my Department has responsibility. My Department and the Dutch Government, therefore, have discussions as appropriate about the Amsterdam and its protection.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) her Department and (ii) agencies accountable to her Department. [5080]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected twice yearly, in April and October. A joint review of the position by the Treasury and the Department is triggered if these commitments in total exceed 15 per cent. of the Department's discretionary expenditure. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is anticipated to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published n the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Arts Funding

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate she has made of the level of public funding for the arts per head of population (a) in the south-west region, and (b) in the rest of Britain. [3179]

Mr. Sproat [holding answer 18 November 1996]: Central Government funding for the arts in Britain, provided through the three arts councils, the Crafts Council and the Government's pairing scheme, amounts to £234 million in 1996–97. Additionally, local authorities spend a similar amount on the arts each year. From these sources the estimate of current level of public funding per capita on the arts in the south-west region is approximately £5.86, compared with an overall average £8.24 for England, Scotland and Wales. In addition, it is anticipated that the arts' share of lottery awards in England, Scotland and Wales will be in the region of £300 million this year, or £5.29 a head. There are also other sources of arts funding generated through Government expenditure: either directly, such as through the BBC—an estimated £300 per annum—or indirectly, such as through European spending programmes. Each of these elements of funding benefits the south-west alongside other areas of Britain.

Millennium Celebrations

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if she will make a statement on plans for regional celebrations of the millennium. [2842]

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 18 November 1996]: There will be a series of national events in 1998 and 1999 associated with the millennium exhibition. The Millennium Commission has not yet decided what funding it may give to other events. In addition to events supported by the commission, there will be a range of local events, organised and funded by local authorities, local businesses, and local people.

TREASURY

Agency Co-operation

Mr. Pearson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 29 October, Official Report, column 61, if he will make available a list of the projects in hand on closer working between the Inland Revenue, Customs and Excise and the Contributions Agency. [3195]

Mr. Jack: The information requested will shortly be placed in the House Library.

Utilities Windfall Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the effective annual rate of tax on output prices of a utilities windfall tax which is fully passed on to consumers and which raises (i) £3 billion, (2) £5 billion and (3) £10 billion annually from privatised utilities in (a) the water sector, (b) the electricity sector, (c) the gas sector, (d) the telecommunications sector, (e) a, b and c and (f) b and c. [3223]

Mr. Jack: Information on the effect of a utilities windfall tax on output prices is not available and cannot readily be estimated because of the wide range of assumptions that would be involved.

Suicides

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of suicides among under-30s, broken down by gender, in England for each year since 1985. [3833]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Cynog Dafis, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on how many suicides in males and females under 30, took place each year since 1985.

The figures for England are given in the attached table.

Suicides[1] in the under-30s, 1985–1995

Employee Share Ownership

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate he has made of the impact on employee share ownership plans of the proposal by the accounting standards board to implement its urgent issues task force proposal in respect of employee share schemes; [3899]

(2) what discussions he has had with the accounting standards board about reporting employee share ownership schemes in profit and loss accounts. [3908]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The take–up of employee share ownership plans will be determined by a wide range of factors and it is not possible to make a precise estimate of the impact on take–up of individual factors. The Treasury has not discussed the UITF proposals with the ASB. However, I understand that the UITF has received a number of representations of concern about the inclusion of save as you earn employee share schemes within the scope of its proposals covering employee share schemes generally.

Maternal Deaths

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, column 401, (1) how many of the women whose deaths in 1991 to 1993 were directly due to maternity were born in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) the new Commonwealth and Pakistan, (d) other countries and (e) unstated countries, as recorded on the death registration; [4491]

(2) how many of the women whose deaths in 1991 to 1993 were indirectly due to maternity were born in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Republic of Ireland, (c) the new Commonwealth and Pakistan, (d) other countries and (e) unstated countries, as recorded on the death registration. [4490]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Audrey Wise, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the number deaths in England and Wales to women whose death was directly or indirectly due to maternity for the years 1991–1993.

The figures requested for direct deaths are shown in the attached table. They cover deaths due to complications of pregnancy, childbirth and the puerperium (International Classification of Diseases code 630–76) and are derived from death registrations. The numbers provided differ from those which can be obtained from the Report on the Confidential Enquiries into Maternal Deaths in the United Kingdom 1991–1993. This Enquiry uses information from several different sources. Before 1993, deaths data was only available by underlying cause of death.

Indirect deaths are deaths resulting from previous existing disease, or disease that developed during pregnancy and which was not due to direct obstetric causes, but which was aggravated by the physiologic effects of pregnancy. These will not necessarily be identified from the death certificate. Therefore they cannot be included in the table.

Unemployment

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the (a) percentage and (b) numerical difference in unemployment rates between the United Kingdom and (i) Germany and (ii) France in each of the past 24 months. [4360]

Mrs. Angela Knight: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Bottomley, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on unemployment in the United Kingdom, Germany and France.

The information you requested is given in the attached table. This is based on the International Labour Office (ILO) measure of unemployment which provides a like for like basis for international comparisons. The ILO measure of unemployment is a count of people without a job who were available to start work in the two weeks following their Labour Force Survey interview and who had either looked for work in the four weeks prior to interview or were waiting to start a job they already obtained.

Annual average numbers of ILO unemployed in member countries are published by Eurostat in their monthly Unemployment Bulletin, available in the House of Commons Library.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4534]

Mrs. Angela Knight: An environmental assessment using the Building Research Establishment "toolkit" has been carried out at the offices occupied by HM Treasury at Allington Towers in Victoria with a view to accreditation under ISO 14001. Extending the assessment to the main building in Parliament street—Government offices, Great George street—is not cost-effective, given the proposed redevelopment and the short time we expect to remain in the building in its current configuration. We are paying particular attention to the drive for energy efficiency to be fully recognised in the proposed redevelopment where an "excellent" rating under the Building Research Establishment environmental assessment method system is required.

External promotion of environmental auditing is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry and the Environment.

Coinage (Metal Content)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have occurred in the metal content of United Kingdom coinage in the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [4817]

Mrs. Angela Knight: From September 1992 onwards, all 1p and 2p coins dated 1992 were made of copper-plated steel instead of bronze.

Transport, Agriculture and Fishing

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes in policy his Department has made during the last 12 months in respect of (a) transport, (b) agriculture and (c) the fishing industry; and if he will make a statement. [5137]

Mrs. Angela Knight: Policy responsibility on transport lies with the Secretary of State for Transport. The Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible for policies on agriculture and fisheries.

Tax Overpayments

Ms Lynne: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total amount spent by his Department on advertising and publicity relating to the opportunities for people to reclaim overpayments in tax; and what proportion of this is specifically targeted at pensioners. [4734]

Mr. Jack: Since 1991 the Inland Revenue has had six national publicity initiatives encouraging savers, especially pensioners, who are paying too much tax on their savings income to claim it back. Approximately £12.9 million has been spent during this period on advertising and publicity.

The campaigns have told savers who are entitled to tax back how to claim, and non-taxpayers to tell their bank and building society not to take tax off in the future.

Oral Cancer

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors have delayed the availability of information regarding the incidence of oral cancer since 1991 as referred to in his answer of 15 October, Official Report, column 837–38. [2725]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 7 November 1996]: The process of cancer registration in England and Wales is carried out by 11 regional cancer registries, over which the Office for National Statistics has no statutory or managerial control. The process of registration is often very complex and often delayed pending the completion of treatment. ONS can only produce national results once the information is available from all registries. Several have introduced new computer systems and ONS is developing its processes which should help to enable overall figures to be produced more quickly.

Unemployment

Mr. Hain: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list figures for the number and percentage of the (a) male, (b) female and (c) total work force who have experienced at least one spell of unemployment since (i) autumn 1990 and (ii) spring 1992, and if he will provide figures by region; [2818]

(2) if he will list the number and percentage of the work force in each of the main occupational categories who have experienced at least one spell of unemployment since (a) autumn 1990 and (b) spring 1992. [2819]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 12 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Peter Hain, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions 2818 and 2819 on spells of claimant unemployment.

The available data relate to Great Britain and are shown in the attached tables. National figures are expressed as a percentage of the working age population—regional denominators are not available. Equivalent figures do not exist on the number of people who have ever been in the workforce.

Occupational information is only available from January 1995 and therefore does not cover the period requested.

Earnings

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list the number of people under the age of 25 years who earn less than (a) £2.50, (b) £3.00, (c) £3.50, (d) £4.00 and (e) £4.50 per hour; and if he will make a statement; [3084]

(2) if he will list the number of people, by gender, who earn less than (a) £2.50, (b) £3.00, (c) £3.50, (d) £4.00 and (e) £4.50 per hour; and if he will make a statement. [3085]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 13 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent questions on earnings distributions by hour and gender in Great Britain.

The latest information, from the Labour Force Survey, is shown in the table below.

Labour force survey, spring 1996—Great Britain

Consultants

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates of the expenditure on external consultants, including management consultants, for each year since 1992, in 1996 prices, for his Department and its agencies; and what are the quantified annual cost savings which such expenditure has resulted in. [4065]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 14 November 1996]: I refer the hon. Member to the letter that I have today sent in reply to the identical question that he tabled at the end of the 1995–96 Session. I have placed a copy of my letter in the Members' Library.

Income Statistics

Ms Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the (a) investment and (b) earned income in (i) 1979–80 and (ii) 1995–96 for each income decile group. [4471]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 18 November 1996]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Ms Dawn Primarolo, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on the investment income and the earned income in 1979–80 and 1995–96 for each income decile group.

The figures requested are shown in the attached table. The figures are derived from the analysis of the effects of taxes and benefits on household income which is based on the Family Expenditure Survey (FES). No figures are available for 1979–80 as the FES was on a calender year basis at that time. The latest information available is for the fiscal year 1994–95. The figures show the mean incomes at current prices for decile groups of households ranked by equivalised disposable income. The figures are not strictly comparable over time because of changes in classification of income and because of changes in the FES.

Drug-resistant Infections (Mortality)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the mortality rates for (a) multi-drug-resistant tuberculosis, (b) methycillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus and (c) vancomycin-resistant enterococci. [4664]

Mrs. Angela Knight [holding answer 19 November 1996:]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the chief executive of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 21 November 1996:

The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked me to reply as the Director of the Office for National Statistics to your recent question on mortality rates for multi-drug resistant TB, MRSA, and vancomycin resistant enterococci.

Multi-drug resistant TB, and deaths due to MRSA or vancomycin resistant enterococci do not have distinct codes within the revision of the International Classification of Diseases used for encoding death registration data at the Office for National Statistics, and therefore there are no centrally held statistics on deaths from these causes.

WALES

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4535]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Welsh Office aims to reduce the impact of its own activities on the environment and to improve the management of its own resources. Energy surveying and auditing is a well established feature of the Department's green housekeeping strategy. All Welsh Office properties have been surveyed and the resulting recommendations implemented. Improvements include draughtproofing and thermal insulation; modifications to air conditioning and heating controls; new energy efficient lighting and automatic lighting control systems.

The Welsh Office has also examined a wide range of its other domestic activity and resulting annual action plans have included measures to reduce environmental effects in the key areas of water conservation; waste management; greener vehicles; ozone-depleting substances; efficient paper use and through raising staff awareness.

As with other Departments, the Welsh Office ensures that its policies and programmes take proper account of environmental concerns in accordance with the 1990 Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" and "Sustainable Development: the UK Strategy" published in 1994. My right hon. Friend is the Department's green Minister and the Welsh Office is contributing to the booklet of case studies which green Ministers intend to publish in the new year showing good examples of environmental appraisal.

The Department published a booklet in September 1994 entitled "Selling to the Welsh Office – A Green Guide for suppliers of Goods and Services to the Welsh Office" which is sent with all invitations to tender. Potential suppliers are asked what action they are taking to obtain BS7750.

The Welsh Office actively encourages environmental management and auditing more widely. It promotes the EC eco–management and audit scheme—EMAS—and the availability of grant aid for small companies under the SCEEMAS scheme. In March, my right hon. Friend launched the business and the environment campaign. The campaign aims to raise awareness of environmental issues and of the commercial advantages of good environmental management including the opportunities for financial savings; promote the increased take–up of environmental services; and encourage firms to undertake best practice in environmental management. As part of the campaign, the Welsh Office is working closely with Arena Network, a non-profit making organisation set up to raise business awareness and to provide advice to companies on environmental issues.

Arena now has around 300 Welsh member companies and, with Welsh Office support, is developing a portfolio of training activities and project work with local business groups. The Welsh Office is also collaborating with Arena, the environmental technology support unit, the environmental technology best practice programme and other organisations on the provision of environmental best practice seminars and workshops for business.

The Welsh Office also promotes improved efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing by supporting the River Dee waste minimisation project which involves 14 companies auditing their use of energy, water and materials and identifying ways of minimising waste generation. The project was launched in May 1995 and has already identified areas for substantial savings.

Head Teachers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the current number of women who are head teachers in (a) the primary and (b) the secondary sectors; and if he will make a statement. [4936]

Mr. Jonathan Evans: There were 769 female head teachers in primary schools and 26 in secondary schools at January 1996 according to the results of the schools census.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4996]

Mr. Hague: The Welsh Office already has accruals accounting systems in place and is trialling the production of resource accounts at present. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the year 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

West Midlands Serious Crimes Squad

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what have been the legal costs met from public purse in respect of claims for compensation for people whose convictions were obtained with the help of evidence from the west midlands serious crimes squad and which were subsequently quashed in the Court of Appeal (a) in total and (b) for each case. [4999]

Mr. Kirkhope: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4979]

Mr. Streeter: My officials are working closely with the Treasury towards the introduction of resource accounting. Systems to provide the information necessary for resource accounting are being procured through the private finance initiative. We plan to award the contract in August 1997. Resource accounts will then be produced and audited for 1998–99. Subject to our, and the National Audit Office's, satisfaction the first published account will be for the financial year 1999–2000.

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4536]

Mr. Streeter: My Department's areas of policy responsibility do not have major environmental impact. Environmental efficiency initiatives therefore concentrate on our impact as a consumer. The Department continues to improve energy efficiency. Both the Department and the Court Service have signed the declaration of corporate commitment to energy efficiency. There is an ongoing programme to maintain, and where appropriate upgrade, the historic buildings on our estate. The design of new court buildings takes full account of environmental concerns, particularly by requiring designs to obtain a "very good" marking under the Building Research Establishment environmental assessment method. Energy audits and environmental assessments have been commissioned for over 70 of our largest court buildings. The procurement of goods and services takes all reasonable steps to maximise the use of recycled and renewable resources.

The Department is now looking to develop initiatives in other areas of green housekeeping, particularly through a pilot waste audit as a first step to setting waste reduction targets by the end of this year, and investigating extending our sensitive waste collection contracts to increase recycling.

Scott Inquiry

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when the Lord Chancellor will respond to the recommendations made by Sir Richard Scott concerning inquiry procedures. [5827]

Mr. Streeter: In February this year the Lord Chancellor invited public comment on Sir Richard Scott's recommendations on public inquiry procedures. The Lord Chancellor was grateful for the 33 responses received, which were referred to the Council on Tribunals—the independent advisory body set up in 1958 following the Franks report on administrative tribunals and inquiries—by a reference in the following terms:

"To consider and advise on the procedural issues that arise in the conduct of public inquiries set up by Ministers to investigate particular matters of public concern, having regard to the recommendations made in Sir Richard Scott's report, and to the views on those recommendations that have since been expressed."

The council has now submitted its advice on the issues raised in respect of inquiry procedures in the Scott report and in the consultation. The Lord Chancellor was most grateful to the Council on Tribunals for this authoritative advice, which will be of considerable value when setting up inquiries. The advice is expressed in broad terms which enables general application, and therefore refers only briefly to other proceedings which might affect the procedural aspects of such inquiries, such as for example, coroners' inquests or, in Scotland, fatal accident inquiries.

Copies of the council's advice have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Additional copies will be available from my Department on request. The council's advice and the Lord Chancellor's statement today constitute the Government's response to Sir Richard Scott's recommendations about inquiry procedures.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Pistols

Mr. Robert McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many incidents have occurred since 1976 where pistols licensed only for target shooting have been used illegally. [4455]

Sir John Wheeler: The Chief Constable has now advised me that the information needed to answer this question is not readily available and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Higher Education

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the percentage change in spending per student in higher education between 1989-90 and 1995–96 in Northern Ireland. [4637]

Mr. Ancram: Spending per full-time equivalent student at Northern Ireland universities, based on constant prices and excluding student support, decreased by 18 per cent. between 1989–90 and 1994–95.

Spending per initial teacher training student at Northern Ireland colleges of education, based on constant prices, increased by 1.8 per cent. between 1989–90 and 1994–95.

Figures for 1995–96 are not yet available.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of 16-year-olds in Northern Ireland remained in full-time education in each of the last five years. [4634]

Mr. Ancram: The percentage of 16-year-olds in Northern Ireland remaining in full-time education in each of the last five years is as follows:

1991: 69 per cent.

1992: 75 per cent.

1993: 79 per cent.

1994: 78 per cent.

1995: 76 per cent.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the percentage of post-16-year-olds in full-time education in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years. [5024]

Mr. Ancram: The information, which is available only for post-16-year-olds of working age—men 16 to 64 and women 16 to 59—is as follows:

	Post-16-year-olds in full-time education (Per cent.)
Spring 1987	6.5
Spring 1988	6.4
Spring 1989	7.1
Spring 1990	7.0
Spring 1991	7.6
Spring 1992	7.6
Spring 1993	7.7
Spring 1994	9.0
Spring 1995	9.2
Spring 1996	8.9

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the ways in which his Department has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4529]

Mr. Ancram: All Northern Ireland Departments have produced green housekeeping action plans and the industrial research and technology unit of the Department of Economic Development has applied for accreditation BS 7750.

(a) The Department of Economic Development provides financial assistance to industry and commerce in Northern Ireland for environmental auditing and environmental management leading to the adoption of standards such as BS 7750 or ISO 14001 or participation in the EC eco-management and audit scheme EMAS.

(b) The Department also promotes the benefits of environmental auditing and consequential action through the publication of case study booklets and liaison with industry groups.

Manufacturing Industry

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage change there has been in Northern Ireland's manufacturing output between 1975 and 1995. [4633]

Mr. Ancram: Over the period 1975 to 1995 manufacturing output in Northern Ireland has increased by 28.3 per cent.

Vocational Qualifications

Ms Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of the Northern Ireland work force has no vocational qualifications. [4639]

Mr. Ancram: It is not possible to identify a definitive list of qualifications which are purely vocational as many—for example, higher and first degrees—come in both vocational and academic form. At winter 1995–96, the latest date for which figures are available, approximately 24 per cent. of the Northern Ireland work force had no formal qualifications of any kind.

Employment Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of people work in Northern Ireland are in part-time employment; and of these, what percentage are (a) women, (b) men and (c) aged between 18 and 25 years. [5026]

Mr. Ancram: A total of 22 per cent. of people working in Northern Ireland are in part-time employment. Of these, 85 per cent. are women, 15 per cent. are men and 14 per cent. are aged between 18 and 25 years.

Qualifications

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland have no qualifications; and of these, how many are aged between 18 and 25 years. [5022]

Mr. Ancram: Information obtained from the spring 1996 labour force survey shows that there are approximately 299,000 people of working age in Northern Ireland with no formal qualifications. Of these almost 29,000 are between 18 and 25 years of age.

Unemployment

Mr. Worthington : To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 18 to 25-year-old (a) men and (b) women in Northern Ireland have been unemployed for (i) more than six months and (ii) more than one year. [5028]

Mr. Ancram: The latest available information relates to 10 October 1996 and is as follows:

Claimants aged 18–24	Men	Women
Unemployed for six months or more	6,677	2,158
Unemployed for one year or more	4,261	1,285

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of the population of Northern Ireland who are without any qualifications are unemployed. [5023]

Mr. Ancram: Information obtained from the spring 1996 labour force survey shows that approximately 10 per cent. of the Northern Ireland population of working age who have no qualifications are unemployed—International Labour Organisation definition.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many 18 to 25-year-olds in Northern Ireland are (a) men and (b) women; and how many in, and what percentage of, each group are unemployed. [5029]

Mr. Ancram: The latest available information is as follows:

	Male	Female
(i) Number of 18 to 24-year-olds (1995 mid-year estimates)	91,223	83,998
(ii) Number of 18 to 24-year-olds unemployed on 10 October 1996	13,792	6,615
(iii) (ii) as a percentage of (i)	15.1 per cent.	7.9 per cent.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4989]

Sir John Wheeler: Northern Ireland Departments and the Northern Ireland Office continue to progress their plans for the implementation of the changes necessary to support the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting. The Departments are in the course of introducing systems which will enable resource accounts to be published and laid before Parliament for the year 1999–2000.

Grammar Schools

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums were spent on the preparatory departments of voluntary and other grammar schools in the most recent year of which figures are available; and for what purposes such money was provided. [4917]

Mr. Ancram: The most recent year for which figures are available is the 1995–96 financial year and the table details the sums spent:

Voluntary grammar schools	1,316,162
Controlled grammar schools	172,060

Under the local management of schools formula funding arrangements, financial contributions to preparatory departments are restricted to 40 per cent. of the teaching costs. All other costs are met by parental contribution.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what activities of voluntary grammar schools are funded by the Department of Education through its funding formulae that are not funded by education and library boards in their funding formulae. [4918]

Mr. Ancram: The funding arrangements for voluntary grammar schools allow for all expenditure relating to maintenance and equipment to be delegated to schools whereas education and library boards handle some of the costs centrally for controlled and maintained schools. The voluntary grammar school arrangements also allow for the payment of VAT and some other costs such as insurance which do not arise in controlled and maintained schools.

Higher and Further Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed and how much money is spent by the Department of Education in administering (a) higher education and (b) further education. [4919]

Mr. Ancram: I will write to the hon. Member.

Pupils

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pupils there are at (a) controlled and (b) maintained schools, at (i) primary and (ii) secondary level (1) currently, (2) in five and (3) in 10 years' time. [4920]

Mr. Ancram: Details of the enrolments for (a) controlled and (b) maintained schools at (i) primary and (ii) secondary level are as follows:

Enrolments 1995–96

	Controlled	Maintained
Primary	89,674	92,769
Secondary	55,289	49,199

Note:
Voluntary grammar schools are excluded.
School population projections are not available by school management type.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4991]

Mr. Willetts: The Cabinet Office will be introducing its resource accounting system on 1 April 1998. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the year 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department and all other departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Government Opportunities Report

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the 1996 Government opportunities special report will be published. [5773]

Mr. Freeman: The 1996 Government opportunities special report is being published today. The report shows that opening up government activities to competition and private sector involvement under the competing for quality programme has led to savings to the taxpayer of over £700 million each year. A copy has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5089]

Mr. Willetts [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The Government response to the Treasury Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed on the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is anticipated to arise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Civil Service (Nationality Restrictions)

Mr. Derek Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what were the Government's objectives in introducing nationality restrictions on employment in the civil service in June 1996; [5248]

(2) if the Government will scrap the nationality bar and restore the rights of Irish and Commonwealth citizens in applying for civil service posts; [5249]

(3) what legal provisions govern the rights of Irish and Commonwealth citizens to apply for posts in the UK civil service. [5250]

Mr. Freeman: The changes announced in my written answer to the hon. Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 1 March 1996, Official Report, column 771, took effect on 1 June 1996 and I have no plans to reverse them.

The legal provisions governing the rights of Irish and Commonwealth citizens to apply for posts in the UK civil service are as follows. The Aliens' Restriction (Amendment) Act 1919 prohibits the appointment of any alien.

"to any office or place in the Civil Service of the State".

Because of Great Britain's historic connections with Ireland and the Commonwealth, the definition of "alien" did not include British protected persons or the Irish, even when the Republic of Ireland left the Commonwealth in 1948. Civil service posts were accordingly open to Commonwealth nationals and citizens of the Republic of Ireland. Having regard to the conditions at the time of their enactment, the concept of "alien" in the 1919 Act included those who are now nationals of European Economic Area member states. Under the British Nationality Act 1981, an "alien" is "a person who is neither a Community citizen nor a British protected person nor a citizen of the Republic of Ireland".

The June 1996 changes were made under the Minister's powers in the Civil Service Order in Council in order to protect the UK's right, which every other EEA member state has, to be able to reserve its core posts for its own nationals.

SCOTLAND

Government Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the share for Scotland of the United Kingdom's general Government borrowing requirement for each year from 1979–80 to 1994–95 expressed in 1996–97 prices. [1365]

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 31 October 1996]: I have been asked to reply.

Approximate estimates of the general Government borrowing requirement for Scotland in 1993–94 and 1994–95 are published in the "Government Expenditure and Revenue in Scotland" annual report. Figures for the complete period back to 1979–80 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Firearms

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many offences involving the discharge of a firearm took place in each year in Scotland since 1966; [4351]

(2) how many offences involving the carrying of a firearm took place in each year in Scotland since 1966. [4352]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Detailed statistics on offences involving firearms in Scotland have been collected since 1978. The following table provides the available information:

Offences involving firearms, Scotland, 1978–95

	Number of offences in which a firearm was alleged to have been used	Number of offences in which a firearm was alleged to have been fired
1978	492	388
1979	682	564
1980	1,093	939
1981	1,314	1,150
1982	1,283	1,058
1983	1,336	1,081
1984	1,353	1,110
1985	1,675	1,352
1986	1,525	1,189
1987	1,429	1,084
1988	1,159	843
1989	1,479	1,001
1990	1,495	1,072
1991	1,921	1,191
1992	1,959	1,170
1993	1,773	1,057
1994	1,788	1,052
1995	1,715	1,219

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many handgun licences have been registered in each year in Scotland since 1966; [4353]

(2) how many handgun licences are currently registered in Scotland. [4354]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the number of firearms certificates on issue allowing the holder to possess a handgun is not routinely collected by the Scottish Office. Individual certificates are administered by police forces. Although annual statistical returns are made, there is no routine collection of the number of firearms certificates which allow the holder to possess a handgun. A special exercise was, however, conducted recently which showed that, at the beginning of 1996, approximately 3,230 firearms certificates current in Scotland allowed the holder to possess a handgun.

Further information on this matter is available at annexe A, table 7, of the Government's submission to Lord Cullen's inquiry into the shootings at Dunblane primary school, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Fisheries Assistance

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications he has received since 1 July 1994 for financial assistance under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance from (a) Orkney and (b) Shetland; how many have been approved; and what is their grant value. [4847]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since 1 July 1994, the Scottish Office has received 18 applications from Orkney, of which 13 were awarded grant aid totalling £1.173 million, and 37 applications from Shetland, of which 13 were awarded a total of £0.987 million.

Four applications from Orkney and eight from Shetland are currently being considered for grant in the next round of awards.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress (a) his and (b) the Lord Advocate's Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and, in each case, in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4997]

Mr. James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office commissioned a new accounting system on 1 April 1996 capable of handling accruals accounting. Good progress is being made on introducing accounting for fixed assets, and on attaching expenditure to objectives, as required by schedule 5 to the proposed accounts, and the Scottish Office will be introducing its resource accounting system during 1997–98.

The Lord Advocate's Department, the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service, will be introducing its resource accounting system in April 1998.

Both Departments in common with others, are preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the year 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929 the first published resource accounts for the Departments and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Population Statistics

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 17 October, Official Report, column 1142, when he will supply the information requested. [5658]

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I wrote to the hon. Member on Tuesday 19 November 1996.

European Structural Fund

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much European structural fund assistance has recently been awarded to the Dumfries and Galloway objective 5b area; and if he will make a statement. [5717]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am pleased to announce that on 14 November, I approved a further £5 million of European funding to 54 projects in the Dumfries and Galloway 5b area.

In total, some £25 million of the available funds have now been committed to projects in the area, which are targeted at promoting economic development. This will be matched by funding from local project sponsors and will deliver over £50 million worth of investment.

Scottish Environment Protection Agency

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends formally to issue the guidance that he is required to give to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency under section 31 of the Environment Act 1995. [5718]

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A draft of the guidance which I am required under section 31 of the Environment Act 1995 to give to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency on its objectives, including the contribution it is to make towards the achievement of sustainable development, has been laid before the House for the required period of 40 sitting days. This guidance is being issued to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency today.

I am also formally issuing to the Scottish Environment Protection Agency a management statement which summarises Ministers' aims and objectives for the agency, its duties, powers and responsibilities, and its relationship with Ministers, Government Departments and other bodies.

An explanatory document which restates the principles of sustainable development, provides non statutory guidance on particular functions and offers a commentary on the agency's duty to take account of likely costs and benefits is also being provided to the agency.

Copies of these documents are being placed in the Library.

Forestry Commission Land

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much money the Forestry Commission (a) received from the sale of land and (b) spent on acquiring land in each financial year since 1980–81; and how much it is forecast to (i) receive and (ii) spend on the sale and acquisition of land in the current financial year; [2893]

(2) how many hectares of land were (a) bought and (b) sold by the Forestry Commission in each financial year since 1980–81; and how many are forecast to be (i) bought and (ii) sold for each region in Scotland and county in England and Wales in the current financial year. [2894]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 13 November 1996]: The subjects of the questions relate to matters undertaken by Forest Enterprise. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. Gordon Cowie, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Gordon M. Cowie to Mr. Hugh Bayley, dated 21 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Scotland has asked me to reply to your Questions about Forestry Commission acquisitions and disposals.

I enclose at Annex A a list of disposal receipts for the sale of all types of Forestry Commission land and properties since 1981, including the forecast for 1996–97.

I enclose at Annex B a list of the total monies spent on acquiring land and other interests from 1 April 1986 to 31 March 1996, together with the forecast for 1996–97. We only hold information on the total amount of money spent on the acquisition of land and other interests for the financial years 1986–87 onwards.

I enclose at Annex C a list of the area of land acquired by the Forestry Commission each year since 1980–81. Annex D gives a similar list of the Commission's disposals.

The Commission plans to sell 14,000 hectares of forest land in Britain in the current financial year. The proportion of this that will be sold in each region in Scotland and county in England and Wales will depend on the state of the market, particularly the demand for forest land in different parts of Britain.

Acquisitions of land are to a large measure opportunistic, depending on the market, and again a forecast for each region or county is not possible.

Beaufort's Dyke (Munitions Dumping)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when Ministers received the initial report of the second survey by the marine laboratory in Aberdeen on the munitions and other materials dumped in the vicinity of Beaufort's Dyke; for what reasons the proposed date of publication of late September has not been adhered to; when the report will be published; what arrangements he has made for (i) publishing the report and (ii) meeting with interested hon. Members to discuss its content and follow up; and if he will make a statement. [4437]

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson [holding answer 18 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend has yet to receive the report of the second survey of Beaufort's Dyke by the marine laboratory in Aberdeen. Analysis of the large volumes of data collected during the survey is continuing. It is expected that the report will be published before the end of November and copies will be sent to interested hon. Members on the date of publication. This adheres to the timetable envisaged.

My noble Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Forestry and the Environment has already agreed to meet the hon. Gentleman to discuss the report once it is published.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5078]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 20 November 1996]: The Government response to the Treasury Select Committee report on the private finance initiative agreed the importance of collecting and monitoring information on future spending commitments arising from contracts under the private finance initiative. Such information is now being collected. The response stated that aggregate projections of the level of expenditure that is anticipated to rise from signed contracts under the initiative would be published in the 1997–98 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Kilwinning Plant Closure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place between his Department and (a) Robert Wilson and Sons Ltd. and (b) Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group Ltd. relating to the closure of their Kilwinning plant. [5045]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 20 November 1996]: Following the announcement by Hillsdown Holdings of its proposal to close its subsidiary Robert Wilson and Sons at Kilwinning, my officials contacted Robert Wilson and Sons to discuss the implications of this decision and the scope for providing assistance towards a project to retain production at Kilwinning. Officials from Enterprise Ayrshire were also closely in touch with local management over this period. However, discussions with the company and its parent company quickly revealed that there was no prospect of the closure decision being reversed. Enterprise Ayrshire has since concentrated its efforts on making available to those affected by the announcement its full range of counselling and training services.

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next proposes to visit the Robert Wilsons and Sons Ltd. factory in Kilwinning. [5047]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 20 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit this company.

Factory Closures (North Ayrshire)

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional measures he intends to introduce to mitigate the impact of the closure of factories during the last 12 months within the north Ayrshire area. [5049]

Mr. Kynoch [holding answer 20 November 1996]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to introduce additional measures, since our existing policies are working successfully. These policies place responsibility for economic regeneration primarily with the local enterprise companies, in this case Enterprise Ayrshire. The measures necessary to address the economic impact of factory closures are among those considered closely by Scottish Enterprise when allocating enterprise company budgets. Enterprise Ayrshire and its partners are currently involved in a wide range of projects designed to stimulate the economy of North Ayrshire and improve the competitiveness of its companies. In addition, Irvine travel-to-work area, covering most of North Ayrshire, continues to benefit from development area status.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

International Planned Parenthood Federation

Mr. Clifton Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will continue to extend financial support to the International Planned Parenthood Federation, with special reference to its work in China; and if he will make a statement. [5376]

Dr. Liam Fox: We recognise that the International Planned Parenthood Federation does valuable work throughout the world to promote reproductive health and provide effective assistance to family planning associations. We shall continue to provide financial support to IPPF from the overseas development programme, subject to the availability of resources and remaining satisfied with the value for money from our investments.

The China Family Planning Association is one of the many affiliates with which IPPF works and we have been keen to know more about the difference that IPPF and CFPA have been able to make to reproductive choice in China. The Overseas Development Administration therefore recently commissioned a review of the role of IPPF in China and its work with the CFPA. A copy of the consultants' report has been placed in the Library.

We regard this examination, led on ODA's behalf by a highly respected and authoritative expert in the population field, as an informed, balanced and realistic assessment. It concludes that IPPF has been able to play an effective and valuable role in influencing CFPA in the development of the kind of activities and role that we would expect of a non-governmental organisation. However, we should recognise that there is still clearly a long way to go.

We accept the review's conclusion that the influence of IPPF has been a force for positive change, and that the continued involvement of IPPF in China will be beneficial in helping CFPA further. These conclusions support our long-held view that it is better that organisations such as IPPF should be engaged and working to influence from within, and is the course that we believe most likely to produce the outcomes that we all seek. We shall expect IPPF to continue its efforts in this regard and be able to better demonstrate the difference it makes. We will maintain a close interest in its future work in China.

We do not envisage changing the general principle of the present funding arrangements under which our annual core grant is provided to support the work of IPPF throughout the world, and is not usually designated for use in particular countries. Exceptions to this principle will concern only those countries where we have bilateral programmes in reproductive health, which does not include China.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Agency Letters

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions (a) non-departmental public bodies and (b) executive agencies responsible to his Department, have provided answers by letter, copied to the Library but not published in the Official Report in each of the last two years. [3157]

Mr. Lang: Records of the number of such answers are not readily available.

When appropriate, Ministers ask non-departmental public bodies to reply directly by letter to Members and these requests are recorded in the answer given to Members which is published in the Official Report. There are currently no arrangements either to copy the letters to the Library of the House or to publish them in the Official Report.

However, when Members ask questions relating to the day to day operations of my Department's executive agencies, the Minister will ask the chief executive to respond and in all instances copies of the letters will be published in the Official Report underneath the Minister's answer.

Dounreay Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Meacher: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the statements by Mr. Gay Mitchell, President in Office for the Council of Ministers at the Council question time in the European Parliament on 13 November in respect of an environmental audit of Dounreay. [5003]

Mr. Page: The President in Office of the Council of Ministers appears to share my view about the overriding importance of the health and safety of workers and the general public. Because safety is paramount Dounreay is subject to rigorous independent regulation by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate and the Scottish Environment Protection Agency: consequently, there is no need for the Commission to undertake an environmental audit, and it has no powers to do so.

Coal Mining Industry

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the chairman of the British Coal Corporation to reply to the letters of 15 August and 9 October from the hon. Member for Normanton. [4787]

Mr. Page: I understand that the chairman of British Coal replied to the hon. Member yesterday.

Coal Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which countries are the main exporters of coal to the United Kingdom; and how much each exported to the United Kingdom in the most recent year for which statistics are available. [5183]

Mr. Page: Imports of coal into the United Kingdom in 1995 were from the following countries:

	Thousand tonnes
United States of America	4,858
Australia	3,641
Colombia	2,687
Canada	1,364
Republic of South Africa	1,313
Poland	1,274
European Union[1]	283
Russia	160
Vietnam	101
People's Republic of China	77
Norway	2
Other countries	136
Total	15,896

Industrial Tribunals (Race Relations Experts)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy in respect of industrial tribunals to ensure that at least one member with special knowledge or experience of race relations in the employment field should sit on a tribunal in a case of alleged race discrimination; and on what grounds. [5362]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The selection of members of individual tribunals is a matter for the presidents of the industrial tribunals and their regional chairmen. However in accordance with the declaration of intent given by Lord Jacques in the House of Lords on 15 October 1976, Official Report, columns 725–26, during the passage of the Race Relations Bill the Presidents have made administrative arrangements so that wherever possible a member who has special knowledge or experience of race relations in the employment field will sit on tribunals hearing cases where racial discrimination is alleged by the applicant from the outset.

Liquidators

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are in place to ensure there is transparency concerning liquidators' fees and expenses. [5457]

Mr. John M. Taylor: In any liquidation of an insolvent company the creditors acting through a liquidation committee or in general meeting may determine the level of remuneration to be paid to the liquidator. In order to be able to make an informed judgment concerning a liquidator's remuneration creditors need information as to the conduct and progress of the proceedings and insolvency practitioners therefore have an obligation to ensure that creditors are provided with such information. In this regard I was pleased to note the issue of statement of insolvency practice No. 9 by the Society of Practitioners of Insolvency which dealt with this issue and urged on the profession the maximum transparency in and about the setting of fees. That guidance has been adopted by the recognised professional bodies and is therefore now a standard against which future professional conduct can be measured.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the fees and expenses of Deloitte and Touche in the English liquidation of BCCI to date. [5456]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The totals of the UK liquidator's remuneration and expenses in the period to 15 January 1996, the date to which the liquidators last annual report was made up, were respectively US$203.6 million and US$6 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current estimates in terms of timing and percentage amounts of dividend payments for BCCI creditors; what is the current estimate of the aggregate total of dividends to BCCI creditors which will be paid; and by when they are expected to have been paid. [5451]

Mr. Taylor: The liquidators plan to pay a dividend of 24.5 per cent. on 10 December 1996. They hope to pay a further substantial dividend in 1997.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of expenditure authorised by him on request from the liquidators of BCCI before the election of the creditors committee. [5297]

Mr. Taylor: In a winding up by the court there is initially no liquidation committee; section 141(5) of the Insolvency Act 1986 provides that the functions of the committee are vested in the Secretary of State. These functions relate principally to the granting of sanction to the liquidators to compromise debts, to bring or defend legal proceedings on behalf of the company and to carry on its business so far as may be necessary for the beneficial winding up of the company's affairs.

In the period prior to the formal establishment of the liquidation committee—that is, between 14 January, the date of the winding-up order made against BCCI (SA), and June 1993—sanction to commence legal proceedings was given in 1,388 cases, including 933 cases in which proceedings were to be issued against credit card debtors. In addition to those sanctions in respect of legal proceedings, numerous compromises of debts due to the company were also sanctioned.

Where the liquidators invited the Secretary of State to grant such sanctions, the matters had previously been referred to and approved by the informal creditors committee which existed at that time unless the amounts involved were lower than the de minimis level set by the informal creditors committee. The extent of the expenditure involved in the bringing of the sanctioned legal proceedings could only be calculated at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the procedure for the proper regulation and monitoring of costs in the English liquidation of BCCI. [5455]

Mr. Taylor: These are matters which the liquidation committee appointed by the creditors consider on a regular basis. Where any person is aggrieved by any act or decision of the liquidator they may apply to the court.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last met the liquidators of BCCI. [5296]

Mr. Taylor: My officials last met the UK joint liquidators of BCCI (SA) on 6 September 1996.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the costs of the English BCCI liquidation to date. [5454]

Mr. Taylor: Payments out of the UK liquidation in the period to 15 January 1996, the date to which the liquidators last annual report was made up, totalled US $491.5 million.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what are the worldwide assets of the BCCI companies, excluding those countries which have ring-fenced their assets; what proportion of the assets is available for distribution to creditors; and what factors have led to the remaining assets being unavailable for distribution. [5450]

(2) what is the aggregate amount for which proofs of debt have been received worldwide, excluding duplicate proofs of debt and proof of debts submitted in countries which have ring-fenced; and what proportion of the amount is disputed; [5449]

(3) what are the global costs of Deloitte and Touche's fees in respect of the BCCI liquidation to date; [5453]

(4) what are the total worldwide liabilities of the BCCI companies, excluding those countries which have ring-fenced their assets; [5448]

(5) what are the global costs of the BCCI liquidation to date. [5452]

Mr. Taylor: These are matters for the liquidators in the various jurisdictions.

Textiles

Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which countries are proposing to amend the list of textiles and clothing products currently not integrated into the normal GATT 1994 rules. [5472]

Mr. Nelson: Stage 2 of the agreed four-stage phase-out of the multi-fibre arrangement requires that on 1 January 1998, all members of the World Trade Organisation which maintain restrictions on textile and clothing imports should reintegrate into the rules of GATT 1994 products accounting for not less than 17 per cent. of each member's imports in 1990.

Multi-fibre Agreement

Mr. Rooney: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list the organisations he has consulted on the proposed stage 2 phase out of the multi-fibre agreement; [5446]

(2) how many responses he has received to the consultation on the proposed stage 2 of the phase-out of the multi-fibre agreement; and of these how many were in favour. [5471]

Mr. Nelson: In preparation for assessing the Commission's proposals about how the EU should implement stage 2 of the phase-out of the multi-fibre arrangement on 1 January 1998, my Department consulted the following organisations:

Association of Independent Stores Ltd.
British Apparel and Textiles Confederation[2]
British Importers Confederation[1]
British Polyolefin Textiles Association[2]
British Retail Consortium[1]
Burton Group plc
Confederation of British Industry
Coopers and Lybrand
Dewhirst plc
Institute of Directors
International Textiles and Clothing Bureau[1]
Littlewoods plc
Local Action on Textiles and Clothing
Marks and Spencer plc
National Consumer Council
Orbis Services
Oxfam
Scottish Cashmere Association[2]
Sears plc[1]
Trades Union Congress
World Development Movement[1]

None of these organisations questioned the obligation to implement stage 2. As to whether stage 2 should include liberalisation of any products under quota, those marked[1] in the list were in favour and those marked[2] were opposed. The remainder expressed no view.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4993]

Mr. John M. Taylor: The DTI is on track to introduce resource accounting and budgeting in accordance with the timescales set out in the Government White Paper, "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money," Cm 2929. Resource accounting systems will be introduced during the year beginning 1 April 1997 and the first set of resource accounts are planned for publication for the financial year beginning 1 April 1999.

The first survey on a resource basis is planned to be undertaken in the year 2000.

Hawk Aircraft (Indonesia)

Mr. Waller: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the next phase of British Aerospace's contract to supply Hawk aircraft to Indonesia. [5830]

Mr. Lang: I have authorised the issue of licences to British Aerospace for the export of 16 Hawk aircraft, and associated equipment, to Indonesia. This export represents the second consignment of Hawk aircraft in respect of the contract signed in 1993. Authorisation of the first consignment was announced in my answer of 19 December 1995, Official Report, column 1081 to my hon. Friend the Member for Saffron Walden (Sir A. Haselhurst).

Consumer Credit Deregulation

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on consumer credit deregulation. [5719]

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am pleased to be able to report progress with deregulation in this area. The Government take the view that consumer credit law provides valuable and necessary protection. However, some aspects of the law can be changed to reduce the burden of regulation on business without detriment to the interests of consumers.

Last year we consulted on five proposals. Careful consideration of the replies we received has informed our decisions.

We have decided that we should revoke the existing regulations on quotations. Few consumers appear to ask for written quotations and the compliance cost to business is disproportionate to the benefit.

We shall reduce the burden on holders of standards consumer credit licences by limiting the circumstances in which they have to notify the Director General of Fair Trading of changes among their office holders or controllers.

We shall restore the value of consumer protection by making changes to the monetary amounts and limits in the Consumer Credit Act.

However, in the light of the response to the consultation, we shall not change the early settlement rebate regulations.

We are to undertake a further short consultation on our proposal to deregulate lending and hiring to unincorporated businesses. We wish to ascertain more clearly the deregulatory benefits and any consumer costs which may be expected if the borrower or hirer makes a deregulated credit or hire agreement either "wholly", or "wholly or predominantly" for business purposes.

We expect to put draft legislative proposals before Parliament during the next few months.

Finally, we shall in the next few months bring forward further deregulation proposals in the consumer credit sector.

EU Internal Market

Mr. Waterson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what decisions were taken at the EU Ministerial Council on the internal market on 25 October; and what matters were voted upon. [5716]

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade represented the UK at the Internal Market Council In Luxembourg on 25 October.

The Council adopted a resolution on the simplification and rationalisation of the Community's customs regulations and procedures. The Council also adopted a Council decision on negotiations with Norway on customs co-operation—Spain opposed.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Timms: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what information is collated centrally on (a) the long-term revenue commitments and (b) any other commitments arising as a result of private finance initiative projects agreed by (i) his Department and (ii) agencies accountable to his Department. [5076]

Mr. John M. Taylor [holding answer 20 November 1996]: My Department maintains a central record of all potential long-term revenue commitments arising from planned PFI projects in DTI and its agencies. However, no projects have yet been finally agreed—that is, contracts signed. No other commitments are envisaged, but if they were to emerge, a central record would be kept.

Kilwinning Plant Closure

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions (a) his Department and (b) its non-departmental public bodies have had with Hillsdown Ambient Foods Group Ltd. in relation to the relocation of production facilities from their Robert Wilson and Sons Ltd. factor in Kilwinning to North Walsham; and what financial help has been offered to the company to assist in the relocation. [5056]

Mr. Greg Knight [holding answer 20 November 1996]: It is not policy to disclose details of discussions of this kind which are commercial in confidence.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Students

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time students have entered the further education sector (i) nationally and (ii) in the west midlands in each year since 1992; and what was each figure as a percentage change on the previous year. [4900]

Mr. Paice: Table 1 shows the numbers of full-time and part-time further education students in each November from 1992 to 1995. The figures for 1995 are not on the same basis as those for earlier years, as explained in the footnotes to the table.

Table 2 shows the percentage changes in student numbers over the previous year, taking account as far as possible of the definitional differences between 1994 and 1995.

The November 1995 student number figures for England are provisional; estimates for west midlands are not yet available.

Table 1: Number of students (thousands)

	England			West Midlands
	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Full-time	Part-time	Total
November
1992	592	1,263	1,855	37	72	109
1993	646	1,283	1,929	43	73	116
1994	677	1,362	2,039	48	82	130
1995	730	1,558	2,288	n/a	n/a	n/a

Figures are on the following bases: 1992 to 1994: Students on FE courses in FE and HE institutions (including sixth-form colleges). Split between full and part–time based on the position in November. 1995: All students in FE sector colleges (other than specialist designated institutions). Split between full and part–time based on attendance over the academic year as a whole.

[1] Provisional.

Table 2: Percentage change from the previous year

	England			West Midlands
	Full-time	Part-time	Total	Full-time	Part-time	Total
November
1992	7	–6	–2	6	–8	–3
1993	9	2	4	16	1	6
1994	5	6	6	10	13	12
1995[1]	9	8	8	n/a	n/a	n/a

The percentage changes in 1995 take account as far as possible of the definitional differences from 1994 noted above.

[1] Provisional.

Lecturers

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what was the average salary of (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time lecturer in (i) the further and (ii) the higher education sector in 1979; [4964]

(2) what was the average salary of (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time lecturer in the higher education sector in each year since 1992; and what was the percentage change on the previous year; [4969]

(3) what was the average salary of (a) a full-time and (b) a part-time lecturer in the further education sector in each year since 1992; and what was the percentage change on the previous year. [4970]

Mr. Paice: Comprehensive information on the salaries of part-time further and higher education lecturers is not available. Information for full-time lecturers is shown in the table, although, as explained in the footnotes, the figures are not on exactly the same basis for all years.

All of the figures are derived from the "New Earnings Survey", based on a random 1 per cent. sample of employees, and so are subject to sampling variation. Precise significance should not therefore be attached to small year to year changes in the estimated averages.

Moreover year on year changes in the estimated averages are not necessarily a direct reflection of changes in pay rates, but would also be affected by changes over time in the composition of the lecturer populations.

	Average gross weekly pay[1] of full-time lecturers in:
	FE colleges and colleges of HE		Universities and polytechnics
	£	Percentage change from previous year	£	Percentage change from previous year
April
1979[2,3]	103		149
1992[3]	424	+7	504	+8
1993	453	[3]+7	526	+4
1994	448	–1	540	+3
1995	449	0	556	+3
1996	452	+1	551	–1

[1] All figures are derived from the "New Earnings Survey", based on a 1 per cent. random sample of employees. They relate to the average gross weekly pay, including overtime and additions, of full-time employees whose pay was not affected by absence. The timing of the NES data collection may mean however that the figures do not always take account of backdated pay awards.

[2] The figures for 1979 are on a different basis from those for later years: they relate to males only; polytechnic lecturers are included with lecturers in FE colleges and colleges of HE (rather than with university lecturers).

[3] Lecturers in FE colleges and colleges of HE exclude lecturers in sixth form colleges in 1979 and 1992, but include them in subsequent years. This difference in coverage may have affected the estimated percentage change in 1993 for this group.

Disturbed Children

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what guidelines she issues in respect of (a) expulsions from schools, (b) the need to take into account mitigating circumstances and (c) the need to provide counselling to disturbed children where appropriate; and if she will make a statement. [5435]

Mr. Forth: Guidance was issued by the Department in May 1994 to heads, governing bodies and local education authorities on the proper use of exclusion. This sets out what factors should be taken into account when considering exclusion. Further guidance on exclusions will need to be issued in due course, in the light of legislation currently before Parliament.

Guidance was also issued in May 1994 jointly with the Department of Health to LEAs and schools on good practice in the education of children with emotional and behavioural difficulties. This reflected the variety of programmes and approaches which may help such children. Counselling may be a valuable approach in some cases.

School Exclusions

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what was the number of school exclusions in (a) England and Wales and (b) London in (i) 1979–80, (ii) 1990–91 and (iii) 1995–96; and what proportion of the school roll these figures represent. [5278]

Mr. Forth: No data on exclusions from school were collected nationally before 1990–91. Between April 1990 and April 1991, 2,910 pupils were reported to have been permanently excluded from schools in England; this represented 0.04 per cent. of the total school population.

The Department will be collecting comprehensive figures for permanent exclusions in the school year 1995–96 as part of the annual schools census in January. These figures will be available later in 1997.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what information she has collated on the number of permanent exclusions from school and on the characteristics of the pupils excluded, in the most recent year for which data are available. [5721]

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Information on permanent exclusions from LEA maintained and grant-maintained schools is now collected as part of the annual schools census. Data collected this year on exclusions in the 1994–95 school year are summarised in the following tables:

DfEE exclusions census: school year 1994–95

Former Pupil (Ridings School)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she proposes to take to provide counselling and education for the child whose name has been supplied to her, formerly of Ridings school. [5436]

Mr. Forth: None. These are matters for Calderdale local education authority.

GCSE

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will list for 1996 the percentage of 15-year-old pupils in total and by gender of the maintained sector of each local education authority (1) entered for GCSE in (a) English language, (b) mathematics, (c) science, (d) English language and mathematics together and (e) English language and mathematics and science together and (2) achieving (i) at least grade G in each, and (ii) at least grade C in each, and in each case their average point score. [3642]

Mrs. Gillan: This information for 1996 is not yet available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if she will list the percentage of 15-year-old pupils of the maintained sector of each local education authority entered for GCSE in (a) English language, (b) mathematics, (c) science, (d) English language and mathematics together, and (e) English language and mathematics and science in total and by gender in (i) 1992 and (ii) 1995; and what were the percentage point changes in each case between 1992 and 1995; [3643]

(2) if she will list for (a) 1992 and (b) 1995 the percentage of 15-year-old pupils in total and by gender of the maintained sector of each local education authority (1) entered for GCSE in (i) science, and (ii) English language and mathematics and science together, and (2) achieving (A) at least grade G in each, (B) at least grade C in each, and in each case their average point score. [3641]

Mrs. Gillan: The information requested is set out in a number of tables, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress her Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year she expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4984]

Mr. Robin Squire: DfEE will be introducing its resource accounting system from 1 April 1997. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Free School Transport

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what powers she has to intervene in respect of the provision of free school transport. [5150]

Mrs. Gillan: My right hon. Friend has limited powers under sections 496 and 497 of the Education Act 1996. She could intervene only if she were satisfied that a local education authority had failed to fulfil a statutory duty or had acted unreasonably, in the very strict sense in which the courts have interpreted that term, and that her intervention would be expedient.

Clinical Academics

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if she will provide the necessary funding to ensure that clinical academics maintain a pay parity with NHS doctors of equivalent grade. [5292]

Mr. Forth: It is for universities and colleges to set pay levels for academics and other staff.

Women

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps she is taking to measure and evaluate the effect of her Department's policies on women. [5491]

Mrs. Gillan: In July of this year, the model guidance on policy appraisal for equal treatment was revised and circulated at Cabinet level for Departments to adapt to their own circumstances. A copy was placed in the Library. This guidance requires officials to identify policy issues which might impact differently on women and men, and other groups, to assess whether this is justified in policy terms, and to adjust the policy if it is not. Advice based on that model has been issued to all senior officials in the Department accompanied by a supportive personal message from the permanent secretary.

The recent Government report, "One Year On" outlines action taken by Government to benefit women since the world conference on women, and also includes baseline statistics against which future progress can be measured.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many appeals there have been to the CSA in (a) the west midlands and (b) England in the last year; and of these how many led to a change in the maintenance demanded from parents in (i) the west midlands and (ii) England; [4372]

(2) how long is the average delay between a successful appeal to the CSA and the correction in the maintenance payments in (a) the west midlands and (b) England; [4373]

(3) how many cases the CSA dealt with over the last year in (a) the west midlands and (b) England. [4371]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the chief executive, Miss Ann Chant. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Geoffrey Robinson, dated 20 November 1996:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency's handling of appeals, and the associated question regarding the Agency's caseload.

The latest period for which full-time information is available is financial year 1995/96. The details requested are not available as specified, ie West Midlands and England. The figures set out in the table attached are for the Agency as a whole, and for Dudley Child Support Agency Centre (CSAC), which has responsibility for cases in the West Midlands (and other areas).

Included are the numbers of appeals received and cleared in 1995/96. Clearances are made up of cases withdrawn, cases outside the jurisdiction of the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS), and those submitted to ITS; they also include cases from the previous year which were not cleared until 1995/96. You should note that appeals can be lodged for a number of reasons, and a successful appeal will not always result in a change in the maintenance assessment.

ITS provide information on decisions only on an Agency basis, and it is therefore not possible to give a breakdown of those cases upheld or overturned for Dudley.

With regard to the question on the average delay between successful appeal to the CSA and the correction in the maintenance payments, we do not routinely collect the information in the form requested.

However, we have recently taken a business decision to re-assess cases returned by ITS in a Central Appeals Unit (CAU), rather than in the CSACs, and this has been in operation since September. This ensures closer, central control of the process. A recent sample of cases processed under this arrangement showed that once the decision of the ITS reaches the CAU, it currently takes an average of 14 working days for them to gather relevant information and to carry out a re-assessment. The case is then passed to the relevant CSAC for implementation of the revised assessment.

I hope this is helpful.

	Total for agency 1995–96	Total for Dudley 1995–96
Number of appeals received	7,121	1,190
Number of appeals cleared	8,117	1,270
Number of appeals submitted to ITS[1]	6,948	1,075
Number of appeals where CSO's[2] decision upheld	1,236	n/a
Number of appeals where CSO's[2] decision overturned	4,399	n/a
Number of cases taken on by CSA	386,052	63,268

[1] ITS = Independent Tribunal Service.

[2] CSO = Child Support Officer.

n/a = not available.

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many cases set out in his answer of 7 November 1995, Official Report, 435, are represented by the headings (a) resulting from pre-CSA assessment paid direct to parent with care, (b) resulting from pre-CSA assessment paid through the agency collection service, (c) resulting from CSA assessments paid direct to parent with care and (d) resulting from CSA assessments paid through agency collection service for each month in the financial year April 1994 to March 1995. [4778]

Mr. Mitchell: There is no business need to maintain data in this format. The information requested is not available.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many staff are currently employed by the Benefits Agency on a casual basis; [4517]

(2) how many staff were asked to leave the Benefits Agency's employment who had been employed for less than two years in the last year. [4518]

Mr. Roger Evans: This is an operational matter for Peter Mathison, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 20 November 1996:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary questions asking how many staff are currently employed by the Benefits Agency (BA) on a casual basis; and how many staff were asked to leave the BA employment who had been employed for less than two years in the last year.

As at the 31 October 1996 the Benefits Agency employed 4,596 casual staff out of a total staff in post figure of 84,241, this includes part time staff.

The following staff with less than 2 years service have left the Benefits Agency within the last 12 months. Details of the reasons for members of staff leaving is not available.

	Number
Permanent	730
Fixed term appointment	712
Casual	4,809

Figures are provisional and subject to change.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Publicity

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total amount currently spent by his Department on advertising and publicity in promoting greater awareness of the availability of benefits; and what proportion of the budget is specifically targeted at (a) pensioners and (b) eligible pensioners who are not currently claiming the full amount of benefits. [4735]

Mr. Burt: The allocation for the current financial year for publicity and advertising is:

Headquarters: £3,855,000

Benefits agency: £5,009,000

War pensions agency: £20,000

The headquarters allocation is for the promotion of awareness of in–work benefits such as family credit and disability working allowance.

The Benefits Agency figure covers the cost of the BA leaflet programme, posters audio cassettes, etcetera, giving information on all the social security benefits administered by the BA.

The War Pensions Agency looks for opportunities to increase awareness by the free display of its leaflets and posters in places such as doctors' surgeries, war museums, post offices, hospital waiting rooms, etcetera. This targets not only potential new claimants but those who may be eligible to claim increased pension and allowances.

The Department ensures that people are in a position to make informed choices on whether to claim benefit. It provides information which is comprehensive, accurate, accessible and easily understood which enables people to establish their eligibility. The Benefits Agency, for example, makes available all information on the social security benefits it administers through outlets including all BA offices, post offices and intermediaries such as the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and Age Concern. Ultimately, individuals may decide for various reasons not to claim.

It is not possible to identify separately promotional expenditure specifically for pensioners.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4992]

Mr. Burt: The Department's programme to introduce resource accounting and budgeting is both complex and massive. Its agencies are upgrading some financial systems and developing new ones to account for programme expenditure and income, and their associated administrative costs; the corporate centre is developing a system to consolidate these and the accounting outputs of its other business units with performance output data to produce departmental resource accounts. Steady progress is being sustained and the Department aims to achieve the milestones set out in Cm 2929, commencing with the preparation of internal resource accounts for 1998–99, publication of resource accounts for 1999–2000 and culminating in the introduction of full resource planning, budgeting and accounting by 2001–02.

Carers

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what extent the support given by carers will be counted as a service for which national earnings could be calculated under the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745. [5092]

Mr. Roger Evans: Regulation 4(2) of SI 1996 No. 2745 provides that, where a claimant performs a service for another person and that person makes no payment of earnings or pays less than that paid for a comparable employment in the area, the adjudicating authority shall treat the claimant as possessing such earnings as is reasonable for that employment. However, the claimant will not be treated as possessing earnings where the other person's means are insufficient for him to pay or to pay more for the service, or if the claimant is engaged by a charitable or voluntary organisation or is a volunteer, if the adjudicating authority is satisfied in any of those cases that it is reasonable for him to provide his services free of charge.

Benefit Regulations

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance he intends to give his Department's offices in respect of the calculation of a work cycle under the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745). [5093]

Mr. Roger Evans: Guidance on the calculation of a work cycle under the regulations will be included in the information on the new rules being issued currently by the Benefits Agency to its offices. In addition, the chief adjudication officer will be issuing guidance to adjudication officers about the changes. This will also include guidance on the calculation of a work cycle.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the Social Security (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 and Social Security (Invalid Care Allowance) Amendment Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2744). [5094]

Mr. Evans: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security has received one representation. The chairman of the Social Security Advisory Committee wrote following the committee's meeting in October at which it was decided that the regulations could be made without a formal reference to the committee.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what provisions he has made to help claimants who will lose their entitlement under the new rules of the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745). [5099]

Mr. Evans: The regulations do not include transitional protection measures for claimants who will lose their entitlement under the new rules.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many invalid allowance claimants currently have allowable travel costs; [5095]

(2) how many current recipients of invalid care allowance will be affected by the changes in the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745) that costs of union and professional association membership will no longer by disregarded; [5096]

(3) how many current recipients of invalid care allowance presently have substitute care costs disregarded; and what is the total annual cost of this care. [5097]

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people will be affected by the loss of entitlement to invalid care allowance in the first weeks of claim as a result of the Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745). [5098]

Mr. Burt: There are insufficient data on which to base reliable estimates. However, we anticipate that the number affected in this way will be small.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many invalid care allowance claimants there are and what assessment he has made of the effect of the introduction of the Social Security (Invalid Care Allowance) Amendment Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2744) and Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 on this figure. [5100]

Mr. Roger Evans: As at 18 November there were approximately 350,000 recipients of invalid care allowance. There are insufficient data on which to base reliable estimates of the effect of the introduction of the regulations. However, we anticipate that the numbers affected by the regulations referred to will be small.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to ascertain how many people will benefit from the Social Security (Invalid Care Allowance) Amendment Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2744) and Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745); how many people will no longer be able to claim; and if he will make a statement. [5101]

Mr. Evans: Data are not available to estimate accurately how many people will gain or lose from the introduction of the regulations and the costs of obtaining such information would be disproportionate. No one will be prevented from claiming as a result of the regulations.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the costs of implementing the Social Security (Invalid Care Allowance) Amendment Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2744) and Social Security Benefit (Computation of Earnings) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996, No. 2745); and what net savings he estimates will accrue from the introduction of these measures. [5102]

Mr. Evans: The cost of implementing the regulations is expected to be negligible. There are insufficient data on which to base reliable revenue estimates. However, we expect the revenue effects to be broadly cost neutral.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many current recipients of invalid care allowance have earnings; and what are the average earnings of current recipients of invalid care allowance before deductions and disregarded payment. [5103]

Mr. Burt: As at 18 November 1996, some 26,500 invalid care allowance recipients had earnings. Information about average amounts of earnings is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Appeal Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of appellants who did not attend social security appeal tribunal hearings gave advance notice that they would not be present in the last available year. [5151]

Mr. Roger Evans: This information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 328, when the Council on Tribunals was assured that his Department would make appellants aware of the consequences of not opting for an oral hearing; and if that communication was included in the correspondence with the Council on Tribunals placed in the Library. [5259]

Mr. Evans: Discussions with the Council on Tribunals are conducted on a confidential basis. However, in the case of the letter sent to the council formally consulting on the regulations, their reply, and a further letter from the Department, have been placed in the Library to assist understanding of the purpose and effect of these regulations.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answers of 4 November, Official Report, column 386, and of 14 November, Official Report, column 328, for what reasons the appeal form approved on 27 September was not available to appellants on 21 October when the Social Security (Adjudication) and Child Support Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996 came into force; when he was informed that it would not be available on that date; and for what reason a copy of it was not placed in the Library on 4 November in response to the request by the hon. Member for Newport, West. [5265]

Mr. Evans: The printing and production of the revised leaflet was more difficult than normal, and did take longer, because of the physical structure of the leaflet and fold-out form. Arrangements were in place for the continued use of the existing form until the new version could be distributed and appellants would not be disadvantaged during the changeover period. As I said in my letter of 14 November to members of the Sixth Standing Committee on Delegated Legislation, a copy of which has been placed in the Library I regret that the answer at column 386 of 4 November was incorrect. On that day, the form placed in the Library was the April 1996 version. The revised version was not available from the printers until late on 18 November and has been placed in the Library. During the course of the debate in the Sixth Standing Committee, I became aware that the correct form was not available and the incorrect form had been placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 328, what proportion of the total number of tribunal chairmen and members the 100 copies of the Green Paper and summary sent to the independent tribunal service represented; [5257]

(2) if he will extend the closing date for responses to the consultation paper "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security", so that all chairmen and members of tribunals can be invited to respond. [5258]

Mr. Evans: There are some 6,000 chairmen and members within the independent tribunal service. The ITS is an independent body and distribution of the consultation paper "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security" within the service is a matter for the president. At the president's request, copies of the consultation paper were sent direct to all regional and full-time chairmen. Additional copies were also sent to the president at his request. The consultation period ran from 23 July to 18 October and the Government have no plans to extend the closing date for comments. Responses were received both from the president—reflecting replies he had received from tribunal members—and, separately, from a number of chairmen and members. Independent analysis of the responses is now under way.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchcliffe) of 13 November, Official Report, columns 270–71, by whom the responses to the consultation paper "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security" are being independently analysed. [5256]

Mr. Evans: The independent analysis of the responses to the consultation document "Improving decision making and appeals in Social Security" is being undertaken by Dr. Roy Sainsbury of the social policy research unit at York university.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what information he has received from the independent tribunal service regarding the arrangements for tribunal members to receive the documents relating to appeals in advance of the hearing where an oral hearing is not requested. [5260]

Mr. Evans: This is a matter for the president of the independent tribunal service whom I understand has written to the hon. Member to explain the arrangements he has put in place.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will have collated the information on the effect of the Social Security (Adjudication) and Child Support Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1996 on the number of appeals to each type of tribunal affected by them and the numbers of oral hearings resulting from those appeals. [5266]

Mr. Evans: An evaluation of the impact of the changes will be carried out over the first year of operation. However, we expect to have some interim results after about six months.

Telephones

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of social security claimants do not have a telephone in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Wales and (c) north Wales. [5263]

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: The available information is in the table.

	In receipt of benefits	Not in receipt of benefits	All individuals
Number of benefit units with no telephone (millions)
Great Britain	2.2	0.5	2.7
Wales	0.2	0.0	0.2
Percentages
Great Britain	11 per cent.	5 per cent.	9 per cent.
Wales	15 per cent.	6 per cent.	12 per cent.

Source:
Information for Great Britain and Wales is available from the family resources survey; the sample size is insufficient to provide figures for north Wales.

Notes:
1. Numbers rounded to nearest hundred thousand.
2. Estimates are subject to sampling error.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 14 November, Official Report, column 329, for what reasons the temporary nature of asylum seekers' immigration status is relevant to the rate of income support payable to them; and what would be the cost of making them entitled to the full rate of income support. [5264]

Mr. Roger Evans: Asylum seekers are not entitled to income support under the normal rules, but those who claim asylum when they first arrive in the United Kingdom may claim income support under the urgent cases rules. Payments under these rules continue until the Home Office decide on the asylum application. If the asylum seeker is successful and granted refugee status benefit can be paid at the same rate as is paid to United Kingdom nationals. The Government believe that it is right to make a distinction between those whose status is settled and whose right to stay in the United Kingdom is established and those where it is not yet clear that the asylum claim is well founded. Only 4 per cent. of asylum applications are successful.

The cost of making asylum seekers entitled to the full rate of income support and jobseeker's allowance would be approximately £10 million a year.

Industrial Injuries

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on asbestos-related diseases; and what is his response. [5828]

Sir Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his response to the recommendations in the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on chronic bronchitis and emphysema. [5829]

Mr. Lilley: We have considered very carefully the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on the qualifying conditions for the award of disablement benefit for chronic bronchitis and emphysema, Cm 3240, and will implement the extension they have recommended in full. This will make it easier for coal miners who are disabled by these diseases to qualify for benefit, and simpler to administer the scheme.

We have also received and considered very carefully the report of the council's review of asbestos-related diseases, which is being laid before Parliament and published today, Cm 3467. The council recommends a number of welcome improvements to the rules for those suffering from these diseases. These will help claimants and their advisers to identify more easily whether they might qualify. In particular, they aim to get benefit to mesothelioma sufferers more quickly. We will also implement these recommendations in full.

I am grateful to the council for the expert and detailed scrutiny it has given to these important issues, and for the practical way in which its recommended improvements are presented. Taken together, around 8,000 industrially disabled people are expected to gain from these changes.

I will be consulting the council on draft regulations to give effect to all these changes. The regulations will be laid to come into force from April 1997. We expect that a large number of people who have previously failed to qualify for benefit will wish to claim again from this date under the changed criteria. Considerable preparation is required to ensure their cases are speedily and effectively considered, without disrupting the Benefits Agency's service to its other customers. Details of the new arrangements will be well publicised before implementation.

DEFENCE

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4985]

Mr. Soames: In keeping with the time scales set out in Cm 2929, my Department has launched Project Capital to integrate commercial-style accounting, output costing and management planning into a single financial regime.

In May of this year an accounting systems integration contract was awarded, following competition, to develop and build a core solution to meet all primary accounting, financial and planning requirements of MOD organisations; to implement new systems throughout the Department; and to provide new skills training to finance and planning staff.

The accounting systems integrator has completed a series of surveys to plan the roll-out of new systems. Early design work and setting detailed accounting policies are being conducted in parallel, and studies into information technology infrastructure and procedures for stock valuation are under way. Work on the registration and valuation of fixed assets, supported by commercial valuers, is proceeding.

Some 800 staff have so far attended awareness training courses and the in-house facility for training candidates for the Chartered Institute of Management Accountants qualification has been expanded substantially.

The first year for which resource accounts are expected to be published and laid before Parliament is 1999–2000.

Gulf War

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on leakage from containers of pesticide during the Gulf war; [5187]

(2) what level of protective clothing was issued to staff applying insecticides in the Gulf war; and in what languages written instructions relating to pesticides appeared. [5188]

Mr. Soames: These are matters that form part of the comprehensive investigation into the use of organophoshate pesticides during the Gulf war which I announced last month, Official Report 15 October, columns 678. I will report further when this work is complete.

Mr. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been undertaken by his Department into the dangers of pesticides to veterans in the Gulf war. [5261]

Mr. Soames: No formal research has been undertaken by my Department into the possible effects of exposure to pesticides on the health of Gulf war veterans. We have, however, urgently examined the medical records of those who have attended the Gulf veterans' medical assessment programme and are inviting those who display certain symptoms to return for further assessment. We shall shortly announce details of the further research we will be commissioning into the health problems of Gulf war veterans.

Defence Estate

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will present an annual report to Parliament on the environmental status of the Defence estate in the United Kingdom and overseas territories. [5071]

Mr. Soames: The annual statement on the defence estimates includes within the section on the management of defence a report on the defence estate and environmental issues.

Air Traffic Control

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the decision was taken by his Department to transfer air traffic control responsibilities from West Drayton to Swanwick. [5105]

Mr. Soames: The decision to move the military en route task from West Drayton to Swanwick to continue the integrated nature of en route air traffic control services was taken in 1991. When it became apparent that extra space would be available at Swanwick, the option of also moving the military area air navigation task to Swanwick was explored and a decision in principle was taken in October 1994. This decision was, and remains, subject to final confirmation of the costs.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the capacity of the West Drayton air traffic control centre to deal with increased military air traffic. [5107]

Mr. Soames: Based on the current prediction that military air traffic movements will remain broadly constant, the facilities currently available at West Drayton would be capable of supporting military area air navigation services without significant equipment replacement up to 2005.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans he has made, in the event of his Department deciding not to relocate the air traffic control system from West Drayton to Swanwick. [5109]

Mr. Soames: My Department continues to support the proposals to transfer both the military en route and the military area air navigation task from West Drayton to Swanwick. Were this to be judged impracticable or uneconomic, other options would be considered, but at this stage we remain optimistic that the proposals can be enacted.

RAF Scampton and RAF Swindeby

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his proposals for (a) RAF Scampton and (b) RAF Swinderby. [5138]

Mr. Soames: Subject to the agreement of a planning brief for RAF Scampton, it is our intention to dispose of the site, although the married quarters are to be retained. RAF Swinderby has already been sold.

Armed Forces Pensions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many former members of the armed forces have pensions which are frozen until they reach the age of 55 years. [5184]

Mr. Soames: As at 31 March 1996, there were 84,486 former members of the armed forces in receipt of an early retirement service pension, which does not attract annual pension increases until age 55.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will delay the tabling of statutory instruments under section 2 of the Armed Forces Act 1996 for further consultation with interested parties and provide a six-month period for such consultation. [5332]

Mr. Soames: No. The statutory instruments to be tabled under section 2 of the Armed Forces Act 1996 provide for military local service engagements and thus allow the formation of the Military Provost Guard Service. This has been the subject of full consultation with interested parties.

Ex-military Bases (Accommodation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on consulting local authorities in areas where ex-military bases have been closed, and the former service housing is to be sold to seek to ensure that jobs, education facilities and health services will exist for people who will move into such accommodation; and if he will make a statement. [5394]

Mr. Soames: Where a site has been declared surplus to Defence requirements, it is the policy of my Department to work closely with the local authorities concerned, normally through the local plan process or by the production of a development brief. Matters such as jobs, schools and health services are for the local authority, but are considered as part of the local plan process and, if appropriate, as part of a development brief. In some cases, service families who previously occupied accommodation associated with a site will have made use of the local facilities, such as schools.

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his proposals for the future of RAF Finningley; and what is the proposed timetable for carrying out these plans. [4560]

Mr. Soames: RAF Finningley is to be sold. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has agreed to a request from the Home Secretary to use part of the site as a prison, and this has resulted in a slight delay to the original timetable. The expressions of interest campaign has, however, been completed, and my Department will shortly be inviting shortlisted candidates to submit formal bids. We hope to be in a position to commence negotiations with a preferred bidder in early 1997.

Beef

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ensure that the beef served to members of the armed forces in each defence establishment and station is from the United Kingdom. [5011]

Mr. Arbuthnot: The procurement of food for the armed forces is contracted to the Navy, Army and Air Force Institutes. My Department does not specify the source of origin from which NAAFI should obtain beef—or any other meat—but expects it to seek the best market price for the product. Based on current volumes and prevailing prices, a switch to British beef would cost an additional £1 million per financial year.

Military Assistance (Rwanda and Zaire)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the military assistance given by the UK to Rwanda and Zaire between 1 January 1991 and 31 December 1995; and what was the cost of such assistance. [5148]

Mr. Soames: No military assistance was provided to Zaire or Rwanda in that period. A member of the Royal Army Medical Corps has, however, provided assistance in 1995 to the independent international commission of inquiry set up at the request of the Government of Rwanda to investigate events surrounding deaths of an unknown number of persons at the Kibeho refugee camp.

Troops in Bosnia (Telephone Calls)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many free telephone calls per week are allowed for British troops serving in Bosnia; when the number of free calls was last altered; what form the alteration took; and if he will make a statement. [5406]

Mr. Soames: Most troops serving in Bosnia are not entitled to make free private telephone calls, but have access to payphones to make telephone calls home. A welfare telephone allowance—WTA—currently £22 per month, is paid to troops as a contribution towards the cost of these calls. There is no restriction on the number or duration of calls made.

The very small number of troops who do not have access to welfare payphones may use the military communications system for a free weekly call home. These personnel do not receive the WTA.

This system has been in place since troops were deployed to Bosnia in December 1995 as part of IFOR.

Low Flying

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made towards implementing the planned reduction in low flying in the borders tactical training area; when the full reduction will be achieved; what plans there are for monitoring the progress of the reduction in volume; and if he will make a statement. [5370]

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence announced on 6 August that operational low flying will be distributed between the three tactical training areas in proportion to their areas when averaged over a year. Action to achieve this aim was set in hand immediately, and the redistribution will be achieved by the end of July 1997. Thereafter, activity will be monitored by calendar year.

Army Recruitment

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current year's recruitment targets for each Army regiment. [4423]

Mr. Soames: Pursuant to my answer of 15 November, Official Report, columns 375–76, I regret that, due to a typographical error, the figures for recruiting targets for officers and soldiers of the AAC and RAChD were wrongly given. These should have read 24 officers and 160 soldiers in the AAC and 10 officers and 0 soldiers in the RAChD respectively. There are no apprentice targets for these arms. The full table is as follows:

HEALTH

Edgware General Hospital

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current cost of the coronary care unit at Edgware general hospital; and what is the estimated cost of the coronary care unit at Northwick Park hospital. [3907]

Mr. Malone: The information requested is not available centrally.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health under what medical conditions the elderly will be occupying immediate needs beds at Edgware general hospital following the transition from an accident and emergency to a casualty department; [4679]

(2) how many immediate needs beds will be maintained at Edgware general hospital in connection with the revised casualty unit. [4681]

Mr. Malone: Following its decision on 25 September, Barnet health authority is currently developing proposals for immediate needs beds in discussion with the North Thames regional office of the National Health Service Executive.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many coronary care cases have been dealt with by Edgware general hospital in each month. [4683]

Mr. Malone: Information of the type requested is not available centrally.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has in respect of the redundant medical equipment at Edgware general hospital when existing services are transferred to Barnet, Northwick Park or the Royal Free hospitals; and what is the value of this equipment. [4684]

Mr. Malone: This is a matter for the Wellhouse NHS trust. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman, Mr. David Phillips, to request this information.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to be in a position to sign contracts with the doctors associated with the new casualty department at Edgware general hospital; and how many contracts will be signed. [4687]

Mr. Malone: Following its decision on 25 September, Barnet Health authority is currently developing proposals for the casualty service at Edgware.

Hospital Admissions (Barnet)

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital admissions in the last 12 months there were in the borough of Barnet; and of these, how many were (a) minor and (b) acute. [4678]

Mr. Horam: The information collected centrally is on a national health service trust basis. Figures for the two trusts for Barnet health authority for 1995–96, the latest year for which data are available, are shown in the following table:

Number of inpatient and day case admissions in Wellhouse NHS trust and Barnet Healthcare NHS trust, 1995–96

Trust		In-patients	Day cases
Wellhouse trusts	Total activity of	37,617	11,563
	which acute	24,736	11,558
Barnet Healthcare	Total activity of	3,267	0
	which acute	552	0

Source:

Department of Health KP72 returns. Admissions are recorded by speciality types, i.e. acute specialties, maternity, geriatric, mental illness and learning disabilities.

Minor Accident Treatment

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the difference between his Department's and local health authorities' definition of a minor accident treatment service unit. [4682.]

Mr. Horam: There is no national definition. It is for health authorities to plan what services are needed for the treatment of people suffering minor injuries.

National Demonstrator Site

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his correspondence with the hon. Member for Hendon, North, what is his Department's definition of a national demonstrator site. [4680]

Mr. Horam: There is no standard definition for a national demonstrator site.

Acute Care

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how (a) his Department and (b) Barnet health authority define emergency in the context of acute needs provision. [4685]

Mr. Horam: Clinical practice varies throughout the national health service. Different health authorities and hospitals use the term "emergency" in different ways.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what differences there are between his Department's and local health authorities' definitions of acute beds and immediate needs bends. [4686]

Mr. Horam: The definition of acute beds for central data collection purposes includes beds in children's and adult general wards, excluding geriatric wards; beds for the younger physically disabled; neonatal cots that are not in maternity wards; and beds in wards for terminally ill/palliative care patients. Central data on immediate needs beds is not collected. The information in central returns provides a useful guide to bed availability; it does not reflect precise clinical practice.

Sir John Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 4 November, Official Report, column 402, what is Barnet health authority's definition of acute care. [4688]

Mr. Horam: This is a matter for Barnet health authority.

Dentists, Sunderland

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the ratio of (a) general dental practitioners and (b) community dental practitioners to children aged (i) under four years, (ii) four to 10 years and (iii) 11 to 19 years in the Sunderland health authority area. [4419]

Mr. Malone: The information is contained in the table:

General dental service and community dental service: number of children in the population per general dental practitioner[1 2 3] and community dental[4] practitioners in Sunderland health authority

Age group	Number of children per general dental practitioners[1 2 3] at 30 June 1996	Number of children per community dental practitioners[4] (whole time equivalents) at 30 September 1995
Under 4	172	2,564
Age 4–10	327	4,883
Age 11–19	392	5,853

[1] The number of dentists (principals) on the health authority list and their assistants and vocational trainees. Sunderland health authority does not employ any salaried dentists.
[2] Some dentists have a contract with more than one health authority. All dentists practising in Sunderland are included.
[3] Excludes hospital dentists.
[4] Figures for community dentists are whole time equivalents and represents the number of staff allocated by: Sunderland Health Commission, Priority Healthcare Wearside NHS trust and City Hospitals Sunderland NHS Trust.
The population figures are at 30 June 1995. Patients are not restricted to receiving dental treatment in the health authority in which they live.

Long-term Care

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list (a) the number of persons currently in local authority-run residential care homes, (b) the average cost per person per week of residential care in local authority homes and (c) the average cost per person per week of residential care in independent sector homes for each local authority social services department in England. [4280]

Mr. Burns: Information on numbers of residents in local authority run staffed residential care homes at 31 March 1995 can be found in "Residential Accommodation: Detailed statistics on residential care homes and local authority supported residents England 1995", copies of which are available in the Library. It is planned to publish figures for 31 March 1996 in the week commencing 25 November. The latest information on the weekly costs of residential care in local authority and independent staffed homes for older people, for 1994–95, can be found in Table U1 of "Key Indicators of local authority social services 1996"; copies of which are also available in the Library.

Sir Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to consult (a) user groups and (b) voluntary organisations in respect of proposed legislation on long-term care. [5146]

Mr. Burns: Draft legislation to establish a partnership scheme will be issued for consultation in the new year. In the meantime officials are consulting informally with major client group interests as well as the insurance industry and local authority representatives.

Antibiotic-resistant Infections

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals have reported outbreaks of methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus in (a) the Yorkshire region and (b) the United Kingdom in the last six months. [4786]

Mr. Horam: The Public Health Laboratory Service maintains aggregate data on methicillin-resistant staphylococcus aureus as part of its national surveillance of communicable disease and infection, compiled from requests submitted by hospitals for the typing of isolates. In the six months, up to and including October 1996, 185 hospitals in England and Wales were identified as having an incident in which MRSA was implicated; 11 of these hospitals were in the old Yorkshire regional health authority. These figures represent the number of patients affected by MRSA not the number infected—about 80 per cent. of people who acquire MRSA carry it harmlessly and do not suffer infection. An incident is three or more patients with the same strain in a month from the same hospital.

Questions relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Treatment Statistics (Sheffield)

Sir Irvine Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) in–patients and (b) out–patients have been treated in Sheffield in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [4898]

Mr. Horam: The number of finished consultant episodes and out–patient attendances for the last three years for each hospital and community unit in Sheffield is given in the tables:

Finished Consultant Episodes
Ordinary admissions and day cases (including well babies)

	1993–94	1994–95	1995–96

[1] Figures are provided for the trusts and directly managed units as existed each year. Charles Clifford Dental Hospital merged with Central Sheffield University Hospital NHS trust in 1995–96. Sheffield community services unit and Sheffield mental health unit merged in 1994–95 to form Sheffield Community Health NHS trust.
[2] Figures are collected on a provider basis and do not represent finished consultant episodes and outpatient attendances for Sheffield residents.
[3] Further information by specialty for England, regional office areas and trusts is published in "Ordinary and day case admissions for England" and "Outpatients and ward attenders, England", copies of which are available in the Library. The latest information for 1995–96 will be placed in the Library by the end of November.

European Union

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the cost in the last 12 months of sending Ministers and officials to meetings in Brussels and elsewhere in Europe in connection with his Department's handling of EU business. [4946]

Mr. Malone: The Department does not account separately for running costs expenditure on travel, subsistence and other overseas expenses connected with European Union business.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of his Department's time and resources are spent dealing with administrative and policy matters connected with British membership of the European Union. [4956]

Mr. Malone: This information can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mixed-sex Wards (West Yorkshire)

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those hospitals in West Yorkshire which have mixed sex wards. [4788]

Mr. Horam: The information requested is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact chairmen of the trusts in West Yorkshire for details.

Fluoride

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue advice that fluoridated toothpaste and fluoride supplements should not be used in fluoridated areas. [5002]

Mr. Malone: Advice is available in the Dental Practitioners' Formulary, the British National Formulary and information provided by the manufacturers of fluoride supplements, that systemic fluoride supplements should not be taken where water contains more than 0.7mg fluoride per litre. Fluoride toothpaste regarded as a cosmetic falls within the scope of the Cosmetic Product Safety Regulations 1989, as amended. In these pastes the fluoridating compound is restricted to 0.15 per cent. All fluoride toothpastes must be labelled as containing the substance. Copies of the DPF and BNF are available in the Library.

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission studies to determine the current average fluoride content of bone in each age group for (a) long-fluoridated and (b) unfluoridared areas of Britain. [5001]

Mr. Malone: The Department has no plans to commission such studies.

NHS Network

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS executives are participating in the NHS network. [5185]

Mr. Dorrell: I have no departmental responsibility for the national health service network.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4981]

Mr. Horam: The Department of Health is currently enhancing its accounting system to meet the requirements of resource accounting by 1 April 1997. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the 2000 survey. As set out in the White Paper "Better Accounting for the Taxpayer's Money: The Government's Proposals—Resource Accounting and Budgeting in Government," the first published resource accounts for the Department and other departments will be in respect of 1999–2000. Copies of the White Paper, Cm 2929, are available in the Library.

Farmers (Suicide)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to receive the findings of the research commissioned from the Warneford hospital, Oxford, into suicides among farmers; and if he will make a statement. [4909]

Mr. Burns: The Department of Health has commissioned Professor Keith Hawton, University of Oxford, to undertake a study on suicides in high risk occupational groups, including an investigation of suicides among farmers. The study is in its final stages, and a report is expected in early 1997.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Environmental Auditing

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission if he will list the ways in which the National Audit Office has (a) demonstrated by example and (b) promoted externally, the ability to improve efficiency and competitiveness through environmental auditing; and if he will make a statement. [4509]

Sir Terence Higgins: The National Audit Office is committed to a policy of concern for environmental issues. Energy management practices in the National Audit Office headquarters building have resulted in better performance than is typical according to the Building Research Establishment's published data for the type of building, and the office is committed to reducing the use of energy in line with Government targets. The National Audit Office uses environmentally preferred products where possible, recycles waste, and works with its suppliers to achieve environmental objectives.

As part of its statutory reporting to Parliament, the National Audit Office has published a number of reports addressing a range of environmental issues, including anti-pollution measures, conservation programmes, and the impact of transport on the environment. A list of 17 such reports over the last five years has been placed in the Library. For example, the report by the Comptroller and Audit General entitled, "Buildings and Environment", published in 1994, examined how the Department of the Environment had set energy conservation requirements through the building regulations, and had promoted energy efficiency measures and awareness of their importance to households, building managers and the construction industry. The National Audit Office is also contributing to development work on Environmental Auditing for the International Organisation of Supreme Audit Institutions.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Live Animal Exports

13. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the adequacy of Council directive 95/29/EEC to safeguard the welfare of live farm animals exported from the United Kingdom. [3732]

Mrs. Browning: The directive provides for the first time a framework within which we can seek to ensure that all member states fulfil their responsibility to enforce agreed Community-wide rules on animal welfare in transit.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the dates during 1995 and 1996 when his officials at Dover have requested advice under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 due to their concern that a vessel was about to sail in weather and sea conditions when unnecessary suffering or injury might have been caused to the livestock on board; [5397]

(2) if he will list the dates during 1995–96 on which a notice has been served by his staff under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 on ships leaving any United Kingdom port prohibiting them from sailing due to adverse weather and the risk of unnecessary suffering or injury to livestock on board; [5395]

(3) on what dates advice has been given to field staff as cited in his instruction "Advice to Field Staff, Carriage of Livestock in Rough Weather, October 1996"; [5399]

(4) on how many occasions during 1995–96 a written or verbal instruction has been issued that the decision to sail in adverse weather with livestock on board must rest solely with the master of the vessel; [5398]

(5) if he will list the dates during 1995–96 on which a notice has been served by his staff under the Welfare of Animals During Transport Order 1994 during a prospective channel crossing on any vehicle preventing it from boarding a vessel due to rough weather and the risk of unnecessary suffering or injury; [5396]

(6) what advice was given when Ministry inspectors at Dover telephoned the State Veterinary Service livestock transport adviser or the veterinary adviser, animal health and welfare section at Tolworth on 6 November about a prospective sailing by the M.V. Cap Afrique. [5400]

Mrs. Browning: Communication between the Ministry's staff at Dover and headquarters is frequent, and often by telephone and unrecorded. Discussions on the weather have the aim of assisting the staff at Dover to form a view. No notices have been served on ships or vehicles to prevent transport on grounds of rough weather. Guidance to staff on this matter is clearly set out in a document entitled, "Advice to Field Staff, Carriage of Livestock by Sea in Rough Weather". A copy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Feeding Stuffs (Contamination)

14. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the extent of contamination of feeding stuffs; and if he will make a statement. [3733]

Mrs. Browning: Surveillance effort is concentrated on food for direct consumption, supported by periodic analyses of feeding stuffs whether for veterinary or pesticide residues or a range of contaminants controlled by the Feeding Stuffs Regulations 1995.

Cattle Cull

15. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on progress being made towards the implementation of the selective cull of cattle in accordance with the Florence agreement. [3734]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government announced on 19 September that they would not proceed for the present with the selective cull of cattle in relation to BSE.

17. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives of the farming unions to discuss the throughput of animals to slaughter under the current cull scheme; and if he will make a statement. [3736]

Mr. Hogg: I meet the National Farmers Union regularly to discuss BSE issues, including the operation of the over-30-months scheme.

Veal Calves

16. Mr. Sutcliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further plans he has to end the transport of live veal calves to the European Union; and if he will make a statement. [3735]

Mrs. Browning: None. However, provisions on directive 95/29 on animal welfare in transit are properly implemented and enforced throughout the Community.

Agricultural Wages Board

18. Mr. MacShane: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the operations of the Agricultural Wages Board; and if he will make a statement. [3737]

Mr. Boswell: After consultation following the last formal review of the operation of the Agricultural Wages Board in 1993, the Government decided broadly to retain the existing arrangements, but these are kept under review.

BSE

20. Mrs Peacock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken to ensure that the Government's BSE controls are rigorously enforced in the slaughterhouses. [3739]

Mrs. Browning: The Government have made substantial additional resources available to the Meat Hygiene Service, which is responsible for enforcing the specified bovine material controls in slaughterhouses, to enable it to achieve our objective of full compliance with controls on SBM.

The State Veterinary Service also carries out regular unannounced surveillance visits to all plants handling SBM. This surveillance is now showing a consistently high level of compliance in slaughterhouses.

21. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the National Farmers Union on matters relating to BSE in the last month. [3740]

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received a number of representations from the NFU both at meetings and in writing over this period.

European Fishery Rules

22. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent on enforcement of European fisheries rules in the last available year. [3741]

Mr. Baldry: In 1995–96 the Ministry spent some £11 million on monitoring and enforcement of the common fisheries policy on land, at sea and by aerial surveillance.

Common Fisheries Policy

23. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with EC Commissioner Bonino regarding fish quotas for 1997. [3742]

Mr. Baldry: I have not yet had any discussions with Mrs. Bonino regarding fish quotas for 1997.

28. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to meet (a) Commissioner Bonino and (b) other European Union Ministers to discuss the effectiveness of the common fisheries policy. [3747]

Mr. Baldry: I next expect to meet Mrs. Bonino and other European Union Ministers to discuss the common fisheries policy on 22 November.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions were held on matters relating to the common fisheries policy and proposals for its modification when he last met his colleagues from other member states of the European Union. [3702]

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for St. Ives (Mr. Harris), on 16 October 1996, Official Report, columns 938–40.

29. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what European Union support each of the member states of the European Union has received in respect of their fishing industries in each of the last three years. [3748]

Mr. Baldry: Planned EU expenditure under the financial instrument for fisheries guidance for the last three years as indicated in member states' sectoral plans for 1994–99 is set out in the table. Details of amounts actually received are not readily available.

Beef Farmers

24. Mr. Fabricant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and food what support he plans to provide to those beef farmers (a) in Staffordshire and (b) elsewhere striving to use non-extensive production methods. [3743]

Mr. Boswell: Beef farmers in Staffordshire and elsewhere may claim support under the livestock schemes run by the Ministry provided that they meet the rules of those schemes, including those relating to stocking density. We have no plans to provide additional support specifically to non-extensive producers.

Farm Incomes

25. Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on projected farm incomes in less favoured areas in the United Kingdom in 1997. [3744]

Mr. Boswell: Following the autumn review of the economic prospects of hill and upland farms, the hill livestock compensatory allowance payment levels for 1997 will be announced on 26 November. Tables showing income levels for cattle and sheep farms in the less favoured areas in the United Kingdom will be deposited in the House Library on that date, these will include forecasts for 1996–97.

Sheep Products Ban

26. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken in respect of the German ban on sheep products from Britain. [3745]

Mrs. Browning: Germany has proposed a ban on the use, in feedstuffs or cosmetics, of brain, spinal cord and eyes from sheep and goats over 12 months of age from France or the United Kingdom.

The Commission has put to the Standing Veterinary Committee a proposal for EU-wide controls and this is under discussion. The UK Government support the Commission in pressing for EU-wide measures and we take an active part in discussions with our European partners. Our objective remains to seek an early agreement on a European basis on this issue.

Livestock Industry Support

27. Mr. Dowd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of his Department's expenditure in 1997 in support of the livestock industry. [3746]

Mrs. Browning: Estimated expenditure, including EU-funded expenditure, in 1997–97 in support of the livestock industry is £2,499 million. Of this £445 million is expected to occur in January–March 1997. An announcement of estimated expenditure in 1997–98 will be made shortly. These figures include expenditure relating to intervention buying, export refunds, private storage aid, premium schemes and BSE measures but not hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Resource Accounting

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department is making with the introduction of resource accounting and budgeting; and in respect of which financial year he expects to publish the first set of resource accounts. [4986]

Mr. Boswell: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food will be introducing its resource accounting system during 1997–98. The Department, in common with others, is preparing to implement resource budgeting in time to form the basis for the 2000 survey. As set out in Cm 2929, the first published resource accounts for the Department and all other Departments will be in respect of 1999–2000.

Sheep and Goats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to amend the Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996 to implement fully the requirement of Council directive 92/102/EC that there must be in force a national system enabling the holding of birth to be identified in respect of sheep and goats being moved within the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [5402]

Mrs. Browning: There are no immediate plans to amend The Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 1996, but this will be kept under review.

Quarantine

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer on 5 November, Official Report, column 488, on quarantine regulations, if his review will extend to the provisions for the importation of dogs and cats from other states in the EU; and if he will make a statement. [5403]

Mrs. Browning: The review will extend to the provisions for the importation of pet dogs and cats from other states in the EU.

Veterinary Medicines

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a list of veterinary medicinal products authorised for marketing in the United Kingdom. [5410]

Mrs. Browning: As recommended by the Agriculture Select Committee, officials of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate are preparing a list of veterinary medicinal products authorised in the United Kingdom. It is intended that the list will be published early in 1997.

Suicides

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has recently been commissioned by his Department into suicides among farmers; if that research has been published; what its principal conclusions are; what response he has made to the findings; and if he will make a statement. [4908]

Mr. Burns: I have been asked to reply.

The Department of Health has commissioned Professor Keith Hawton, University of Oxford, to undertake a study on suicides in high risk occupational groups, including an investigation of suicides among farmers. The study is in its final stages, and a report is expected in early 1997.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 285

SESSION 1996–97

11th November—21st November 1996

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
